FROM REBEL SOURCES.

A Supposed Spy Arrested.

On Saturday last a man named Albert W. Sinclair, who also passes under the alias of Carrington, was arrested on Third street, in the neighborhood of the African church, by Detective Frederick Shaffer, of the Eastern district, in the tenement from which Webster, the spy, was taken. About nine months since, Sinclair, who, at that time, passed for a Lieutenant in the Yankee army, and professed to be a deserter, appeared in Richmond, and was committed to Castle Goodwin as a spy. After being there a considerable time, he succeeded in palming himself off on a green sentinel as an officer of the prison, and not only liberated himself, but passed out on his own authority the notorious Col. Adler, a fellow prisoner, who succeeded in making his way to the North. The officers heard nothing of Sinclair's whereabouts until a few days ago, when they were privately informed that he was in the city, and took measures to effect his arrest, in which they were successful, as above related. It is believed that he has been backward and forward from this city to the North several times since he escaped, and been thus useful to the enemy as a spy.

Port Hudson Not to be Taken.

[From the Jackson Appeal.]

If there are any fears existing in regard to the safety of Port Hudson, let them be at once dismissed. All the Yankees in this world and in that region where pine knots and cord wood wouldn't bring the first cost of cutting combined could not reduce Port Hudson.

The Rebels "Won't be Reconstructed."

[From the Richmond Dispatch, Jan. 26.]

Nothing falls more strangely on Southern ears than the talk of reconstruction which we hear so much of in the resolutions and speeches of Northern conservatives. How to undeceive men who indulge such illusions we know not. They must put themselves in our places, undergo all that we have undergone, and feel all that we feel, in order to understand that of all impossible things in this world, the reconstruction of the old Union is the most impossible.

Reconstruction! Can they reconstruct the family circles which they have broken?—can they reconstruct the fortunes which they have scattered?—can they reconstruct the bodies of our dead kindred which by tens of thousands they have destroyed? When they can do this they can reconstruct the old Union. When they can do this—when they can breathe the breath of life into the pallid faces of our sons and brothers and restore them once more, living and happy, to our desolate firesides—they may dream of bringing back that Union whose only principle of cohesion was the mutual love and confidence of its people.

If the reconstructionists want peace, they can easily have it upon the terms on which they could have it—letting us alone. We ask neither more, or less. We are not invading their territory nor giving their homes to the flames, their populations to prison and their women to a fate worse than death. Let us alone! That is all we ask. Let us alone, and peace will return once more to bless a distracted land. But do not expect us to degrade ourselves and cast dishonor upon the graves of our kindred by ever returning to the embrace of those whose hands are dripping with the tears and blood of our people.

The War on the Ocean.

Operations of the Confederate Steamer Florida.

The New York Express publishes the following extract from a letter of Captain R. A. Small, late master of the brig Carrie Ann, of Machias, Me., burnt on the 22d instant, near Cardenas, Cuba, by the Confederate steamer Florida:

CARDENAS, Jan. 23, 1863.

"You will be surprised to learn by this time that Carrie Ann is destroyed, burned by the Confederate steamer Florida, and in the very harbor of Cardenas. She hove us to last night just at dark, right about off Stone Key, bearing S. W., half a mile distant, in seven or eight fathoms of water, and wind strong from the North, giving me just fifteen minutes to clear my boat and take what clothes I could collect in that time, reserving my chronometer, barometer, sextant, spy-glass, charts, &c.—You can judge what clothes I could save in that time, man the boat and leave.—In twenty minutes she was in a light blaze, having fired her cabin and mainsail."

The Black Brigade.

On the subject of Cameron's Black Brigade the World wittily remarks:

"Simon Cameron may be very happy to lead a brigade of "colored Unionists" into the heart of the rebellion, (wherever that may be) or anywhere else out of the reach of Dr. Boyer and legislative committees.—But what will the "colored Unionists" say to the matter? "Wendell Phillips," said a certain Boston lawyer of dubious fame to an acquaintance, "called me Judas Iscariot in a speech to-night, but I dont mind it." "I dare say not," replied his acquaintance, but how do you suppose Judas would like it?"

Why is a bird like a greedy creature? Because it never eats less than a peck.

SELECT TALE.

A ROGUE'S LIFE.

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

CHAPTER I.

I am going to try if I can write something about myself. My life has been rather a queer one. It may not seem particularly useful or respectable; but it has been, in some respects, adventurous; and that may give it claims to be read, even in the most prejudiced circles. I am an example of some of the workings of the social system of this illustrous country on the individual native; and, if I may say so without unbecoming vanity, I should like to quote myself for the edification of my countrymen.

Who am I? Uncommonly well connected. I came into this world with the great advantage of having Lady Malkinshaw for a grandmother, her ladyship's daughter for a mother, and Francis James Softly, M. D. (commonly called Doctor Softly) for a father. I put my father last, because he was not so well connected as my mother, and my grandmother first, because she was the best connected of the three. I have been, am still, and may continue to be, a Rogue; but I am not abandoned enough yet to forget the respect that is due to rank. On this account, I trust, nobody will show such want of regard for my feelings as to expect me to say much about my mother's brother. That inhuman person committed an outrage on his family by making a fortune in the soap and candle trade. I apologize for mentioning him, even in an accidental way. The fact is, he left my sister Annabella a legacy of rather a peculiar kind, saddled with certain conditions which indirectly affected me; but this passage of the family history need not be produced yet. I apologize a second time for alluding to money matters before it was absolutely necessary. Let me get back to a pleasing and reputable subject by saying a word or two more about my father.

I am rather afraid that Dr. Softly was not a sharp medical man; for in spite of his great connections, he did not get a very magnificent practice as a physician. As a general practitioner, he might have bought a comfortable business, with a house and shop attached; but the son-in-law of Lady Malkinshaw was obliged to hold up his head, and set up his carriage, and live in a street near a fashionable square, and keep an expensive and clumsy footman to answer the door, instead of a cheap and tidy house-maid. How he managed to "maintain his position" (that is the right phrase) I never could tell. His wife did not bring him a farthing. When the honorable and gallant baronet, her father died, he left the widowed Lady Malkinshaw with her worldly affairs in a curiously involved state.—Her son (of whom I feel truly ashamed to be obliged to speak so soon) made an effort to extricate his mother—involved himself in a series of unfathomable messes, which commercial people call, I believe, transactions—struggled for a little while to get out of them in the character of an independent gentleman—failed—and then spiritlessly availed himself of the obligations he was under to the candle trade. His mother always looked down upon him after this; but borrowed money of him also—in order to show, I suppose, that her maternal interest in her son was not altogether extinct. My father tried to follow her example—in his wife's interests, of course; but the soap boiler brutally buttoned up his pockets, and told my father to go into business for himself. Thus it happened that we were certainly a very poor family, in spite of the fine appearance we made, the fashionable street we lived in, the neat brougham we kept, and the clumsy and expensive footman who answered our door.

What was to be done with me in the way of education? If my father had consulted his means I should have been sent to a cheap commercial academy; but he had to consult his relationship to Lady Malkinshaw, so I was sent to one of the most fashionable and famous of the great public schools. I will not mention it by name, because I don't think the masters would be proud of my connection with it.

The reader has probably been into the pit of the opera, on the night of an attractive performance, and has seen to what a condition the lower middle class are reduced when they will intrude themselves into a place dedicated to the pleasures of rich and titled people. He is aware that these unfortunates pay the sum of seven shillings each for admission to a building in which no seat is guaranteed them for their money. He has seen them congregating before closed doors—a mob disguised for the occasion in evening costume, the men in black trousers, and women with bare shoulders—ready, when the doors are open, to scramble for the places which their money has not secured for them beforehand. They push in with might and main, the nimbler and stronger secure seats, the rest—men and women together—stand in the gangway for the whole evening, if they can, or sit down wearily on dirty steps and unpossessed corners of benches, when they can stand no longer. All around them comfortable boxes, reserved for the distinguished people who can roll to the theatre in their carriages; between them and the stage are snug seats kept empty for the other distinguished people who can pay gold instead of silver. For these rich and titled spectators the place affords every possible luxury; for the payer of seven shillings it provides almost every conceivably discomfort. Has it ever occured to the opera-going reader that these poor members of the audience have no business in the rich theatre, and that the neglectful manner in which they are treated there is, in effect, not a very roundabout method of reminding them of this, if they could only be brought to understand it—a practical rebuke, unfeelingly administered to a foolish ambition? Why will they try to nibble at the fashionable luxury of which they cannot afford to purchase a comfortable meal? Why don't they go to a cheap theatre of their own, to which they can walk in their every-day costume, and in which they can secure the best place to be had for less than the seven shillings which secure them nothing but admission inside the doors at the other place? Why can't they do this? And then they will see that they have no business among the rich people, and, what is more, that the rich people themselves (I say nothing of the purveyors of entertainment to the rich people) evidently think so.

If these thoughts have ever occured to you at the opera, you will be at no loss to understand what my position was at the fashionable public school. The allowance my father could afford to give me would have made me happy at a commercial academy; but as it was but a tenth part of the allowance which the rich fathers of other boys were able to give them, it only made me wretched at the fashionable public school. I was one of the outside standers in the pit, looking at my fortunate superiors in the boxes and stalls. "You are the son of a gentleman," said my father at parting, "and you are going to be educated among gentlemen, where you will make aristocratic connections that will be of the greatest use to you in after life." There is a remarkable observance of form in the talking of arrant nonsense.—Wisdom utters itself in varying phrases and tones; but folly has set its forms of expression, which seem to suit alike all the talkers of a whole generation. I have heard that lamentable commonplace about the "making of aristocratic connections," repeated fifty times, by fifty different parents, invariably in the exact form of words which I have just quoted, with the same solemn assurance of expression, and the same bland contentment of tone which I remember as characteristic of the Doctor, when he and I parted at the school door: "Make aristocratic connections!" I was a practical boy, and I set to work to make money instead. It was utterly impossible for me to associate comfortably with my schoolfellows, with such an allowance as I possessed. I earned money, therefore, by doing lessons for dunces, paid, when I could, and lent my savings to young spendthrifts, at extravagant rates of interest. I led a surreptitious life of it, both in the school and in the playground, and learnt my first lessons in the occult science of roguery under the very shadow of the aristocratic connections. I was found out, I was flogged, lectured, sent to Coventry, I ran away and was flogged again. I ran away three times and was flogged three times.—I made four aristocratic connections and had four pitched battles with them; three thrashed me and one I thrashed. I learnt to play at cricket, to hate rich people, to cure warts, to write Latin verses to swim, to recite speeches, to cook kidneys on toast, to draw caricatures of the masters, to construe Greek plays, to black boots and to receive kicks and serious advice resignedly. Who will say that the fashionable public school was of no use to me after that.

After I left school, I had the narrowest escape possible of intruding myself into another place of accomodation for distinguished people, in other words, I was very nearly being sent to college. Fortunately for me, my father lost a law-suit just in the nick of time, and was obliged to scrape together every farthing of available money that he possessed to pay for the luxury of going to law. If he could have saved his seven shillings, he certainly would have sent me to scramble for a place in the cut of the great university theatre; but his purse was empty and his son was not eligible therefore for admission, in a gentlemanly capacity, at the door.

PITTSBURGH PRODUCE MARKET.

OFFICE OF THE DAILY POST, Thursday, Feb. 5th, 1863.

Remarks—We have nothing new to note as regards the leading articles; the remarks we made yesterday would, in a great measure for to-day.—Buyers of Flour on speculation did not seem as anxious to purchase, while the market was firm with a fair demand, which was principally for home use. The rates in the East will not justify those demanded here. In New York common grades declined 5@10c ₱ barrel, and the better descriptions 10@15c. In Philadelphia the decline was 5@10c. The fact is, the rates in the East are fully as low as in Pittsburgh, this of course will prevent exports, and speculators will have to depend on their market, whether their expectation will be realized remains to be seen. Grain was not very active, for the best of all reasons, their being very light stocks to operate on. Oil—The market has undergone a variety of changes during the week. There is scarcely any two dealers that quote alike; the stock in hand at this time is large. If the present cold weather continues and the Allegheny river closes, prices will undoubtedly advance. On this account the market has stiffened.

Fish—The demand is improving with a fair demand; sales 10 bbls No. 3 Large Mackeral, $7½; 10 do medium, $6½; small sales of No. 1 were made at $14½; other kinds of Fish dull and not much enquired for.

Tobacco—Sales of 10 boxes, five plug, Pittsburgh Manufactured, 63c; 100 do do terms private

Flour—The market yesterday was inactive, dealers generally being undecided whether to sell or ask higher figures. The sales that came under our notice were 400 barrels Extra, at $5 00@5 10; 110 do $5 25@5 50; 140 do $5 75@5 87½; 125 do $6 75@7 25.

Grain—The market was firm; the current rates for Red Wheat is $1 30; White $1 40.

Corn is held higher; sales from depot 75c, and from store 80c.

Barley—Market dull at $1 10@1 15.

Rye held at 80c.

Oats ranges from 50@55c.

Hay—Sales of 12 loads at sales at $15@16½.

Sugar—Sales of Orleans at 11½@12½; Coffee 20.5.8c; Rio at 14½; 20 do Coffee C, 16½@16; sales of A, at

Molasses—Sales of Orleans at 55@58c; Syrup sales 25 bbls, 55c.

Coffee—Sales 25 sacks at 32@34c.

Salt—Sales 125 bbls at $2

Rice—Sales of 10 sacks at 8½c

Cheese—Sales 130 boxes 12@12½.

Whiskey unchanged; Common 55@56c.

Philadelphia Cattle Market, Feb. 2d.

The arrivals of Beef Cattle were moderate, reaching only about 1,400 head this week at Phillips' Yard, most of which was disposed of at full rates, ranging from $9 to $10½ ₱ cwt, nett, the news of holders limiting the demand from both the butchers and packers.

Total number offered 1,400.

Cows were rather better, and about 80 sold at from $20 to $50 each for Springers, and $22 to $40 Cows and Calves.

Hogs were also in better, and all offered, some 4,000 head, sold, including 2,700 at Imhoff's, at from $8½@8¾ ₱ cwt, and 1,000 at the Avenue Yard at $8½@7½ ₱ cwt, nett.

RIVER NEWS

Cincinnati.

The river here has fell slowly during the past twenty-four hours. The Lower Ohio, Cumberland and Tennessee are in fine navigable order. With no tunnage, freights are offered freely for Pittsburgh and Nashville, at advanced rates.

We have no arrivals to record outside of the Louisville packet, Major Anderson.

The Market Boy, for the Kanawha, Queen City, No. 2, for Madison, (ferry-boat), and Nevada for St. Louis, include the departures—all with fine trips.

The Argonaut, No. 2, from Pittsburgh, Armenia, from St. Louis, Imperial, Tycoon, Henry Fitzhigh, and Lady Pike, from Memphis, are the first boats due here.

Notwithstanding the recent disastrous conflagration, whereby Messrs. Riggs & Murray, the well known steamboat painters, were rendered homeless, they were again "full blast" on the following day, at their new stand, No. 11 East Front street—a few doors west of the "burned district."

New Albany.

The river at this point has risen about two feet in the past twenty-four hours, and is still rising quite fast.

The Cumberland is reported falling, with thirteen feet on the shoals.

The B. J. Adams, of the Marine Brigade fleet, arrived this morning from Mound City. She will be painted and finished up here. Capt. Sol. Matson is her commander.

The Atlantic will be around from Nashville in a few days. We hear is suggested that she would make a splendid Louisville and Cincinnati independent packet.

Nashville.

The river is falling slowly, with about 12 feet of water on the shoals.

The following steamboats left our landing on the 29th ult.

For Louisville—Huntress, Science, Allie Sullivan, Capitola, W. G. Woodside, and Des Moines City.

For Smithland, Ky.—Hornet and Charley Miller.

The above were escorted out by two or three gunboats.

When the Government discharges the large fleet of steamboats now in port, we may expect to see many of our business men receiving large supplies of goods.

The pilot-houses on all the boats were ornamented in various ways, presenting a very singular appearance. Nearly all had several thickness of plank nailed over the side windows, some were guarded by "iron-clad" planking, one had four bales of hay secured to the starboard side, several had mattresses and other contrivances for the safety of the pilot, and all displayed an exercise of ingenuity and wholesome regard for the soundness of the pilot's body corporate.

When the recent rise in the Cumberland commenced, the boats forming the pontoon bridge were disconnected and moored close to the bank of the river. Owing to the carelessness of the person having them in charge, several were left high and dry on land, and for the last three or four days about one hundred intelligent contrabands have been engaged in placing them back in the river, and the work is not yet done. One good thing about it, however, is the fact that the work has kept employed a number of negroes, who would, perhaps, otherwise have been employed in stealing. It would be a decided relief to the citizens of Nashville were all the idle, lazy negroes about the place, put to some kind of work. It will not be long before our people can have the convenient privilege of crossing the river on the pontoon.

St Louis

The Ohio river boatmen have succeeded in obtaining from the proper authorities, a contract for their boats in the employ of the Government. The price per diem is $200 for small craft, and $325 for large ones, the government furnishing the fuel.
