Correspondence of the Post. NASHVILLE, TENN., Feb. 6, 1863. EDITOR MORNING POST: On the 2d day of December, 1861, there was an independent cavalry company passed through Pittaburgh; their destination was Louisville to act as a body guard for General Sherman, commanding the Department of the Ohio. After he was relieved and General Buell appointed his successor, the company was retained in the same capacity. The name of the company was with General Buell in his campaign through the States of Tennessee, Mississippi and Northern Alabama. While we were lying at Huntsville, Alabama, Capt. Palmer asked and received permission to return to Pennsylvania and recruit a bat alion for headquarter duties, which subsequently, was extended so as to raise a regiment, and the fruits of that recruiting was the 15th Pennsylvania or Anderson Cavalry, who mutinied in the face of the enemy, or rather on the eve of a battle, and only about 300 could be persuaded to go to the front. As this so called Anderson Cavalry are styling themselves the Anderson Troop, I wish to correct any false impressions that might be made at home regarding the Anderson Troop, a
