THEY CONTAIN

NEITHER RUM OR BAD WHISKY!

They will cure the above diseases in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred.

Whilst the Sale and universal popularity of Hoofland's German Bitters (purely vegetable) bears unparalleled testimony to their virtues, the unscrupulous advertisers, have opened upon suffering humanity the flood gates of Nostrums in the shape of poor whiskey, variously compounded with poisonous drugs, and christened Tonics, Stomachics and Bitters.

Beware of the innumerable array of alcoholic preparations in plethoric bottles, and big-bellied kegs, under the modest appellation of Bitters; which, instead of curing only aggravates diseases, and leaves the disappointed sufferers in despair.

YOU WANT SOMETHING to STRENGTHEN YOU!

YOU WANT A GOOD APPETITE!

DO YOU WANT TO BUILD UP YOUR CONSTITUTION?

DO YOU WANT TO FEEL WELL?

DO YOU WANT TO GET RID OF HER VOUNESS?

DO WANT ENERGY?

Do you want to sleep well?

Do you want a brisk and vigorous feeling?

If so, do use

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.

From J. Newton Brown, D. D., Editor of the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge.

Although not disposed to favor or recommend Patent Medicines in general, through distrust of their ingredients and effects, I yet know of no sufficient reason why a man may not testify to the benefit he believes himself to have received from any simple preparation in the hope that he may thus contribute to the benefit of others.

I do this the more readily in regard to Hoofland's German Bitters, prepared, by Dr. C. M. Jackson, of this city, because I was prejudiced against them for many years, under the impression that they were chiefly an alcoholic mixture. I am indebted to my friend Robert Shoemaker, Esq., for the removal of this prejudice by proper tests, and for encouragement to try them, when suffering from great and long continued debility. He sent me three bottles of these Bitters, at the beginning of the present year, was followed by evident relief, and restoration to a degree of bodily and mental vigor which I had not felt for six months before, and had almost despaired of regaining. I therefore thank God and my friend for directing me to the use of them.

J. NEWTON BROWN.

PHILADELPHIA, June 23, 1861.

From the Rev. Joseph H. Kennard, Pastor of the Tenth Baptist Church.

DR. JACKSON—DEAR SIR:—I have been frequently requested to connect my name with commendations of different kinds of medicine, but regarding the practice as out of my appropriate sphere, I have in all cases declined; but with a clear proof in various instances, and particularly in my own family, of the usefulness of Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, I depart from my usual course, to express my full conviction that for general debility of the system, and especially Liver Complaint it is a safe and valuable preparation. In some cases it may fail, but usually I doubt not it will be very beneficial to those who suffer from above causes. Yours very respectfully,

J. H. KENNARD,

Eighth below Coates street, Phila., Dec. 24th.

Extract from the Wife of ALDERMAN WUNDER, Germantown.

GERMANTOWN, June 1, 1861.

DR. C. M. JACKSON—Sir—It gave me pleasure, years ago, to give you a certificate, testifying to the German Bitters had done for me. I am now perfectly cured of all those diseases your edicine professed to cure, viz: Dyspepsia, Chronic and Nervous debility, disease of the Kidneys, &c. The powerful influence it exerts upon Nervous prostration is surprising. I have been consulted frequently in reference to your Bitters, and without hesitation, have recommended it for the above complaints, and in every instance it has effectually cured. Your medicine has a great reputation in Germantown, and is sold in every Drug Store, and in most of the Grocery stores here. Many one called on me, and say, let them come to Germantown, and I will prove to their satisfaction, that the Bitters have cured in this vicinity more than twenty cases of the above diseases.

Respectfully, HANNAH WUNDER,

Main street, above Rittenhouse, Germantown, Penn'a.

JUST THE THING FOR THE SOLDIERS.

Will build up the constitution, and give health and strength to an overtasked and diseased system.

THE TESTIMONY FROM THE ARMY.

PHILADELPHIA, August 16, 1862.

DR. C. M. JACKSON—Dear Sir:—While in Virginia, owing to the change of water, I was taken with severe diarrhœa, which seemed incurable, and which greatly weakened me. When we reached Martinsburg, I feared I should have to come home; but noticing some of your Bitters in the store Mr. H. K. Price, in that town, I purchased a couple, and on taking it was speedily restored to health. The diarrhœa was quickly checked, and I experienced no return of it. A number of my comrades, who suffered in the same manner and from the same cause, with whom I shared the Bitters, join me in this certificate. I expect to retire to the seat of war with the Legion, and shall certainly take a supply of the Bitters to join my knapsack. I would not be without it in weight if sold, particularly on going into a measles region.

Yours, truly, A. E. ALTEMUS,

Company H, Scott Legion.

DAILY POST.

A Quarrel between Bragg and Breckinridge.

The Causes of the Difficulty.

From the Nashville Union, Feb. 7.

The public have hitherto had vague intimations that the relations between Gen. Bragg and Breckinridge and the Kentucky troops have for some time past been of a nature by no means amicable, and not long before the defeat of Bragg at Stone's River, their mutual hatred broke out in a quarrel.

From the day when Bragg began to retreat from Kentucky, Breckinridge and the Kentucky rebel soldiers distrusted Bragg and felt gloomy. Bragg saw much, and his spies told him more, bringing him each day petulant and sarcastic remarks, dropped unguardedly in conversation by disaffected soldiers and officers. Breckinridge and Bragg understood each other perfectly, and they became deadly foes.—Not long before the battle of Stone's River, a private in Breckinridge's division was court-martialed for a trivial offence, and as he was a Kentuckian, Bragg ordered him to be shot as a warning to all soldiers from that State. Kentucky blood was rather too feverish, he said, for the health of the army, and he thought a little bloodletting would bring the corn-crackers to their senses.

Breckinridge hastened to Bragg's headquarters as soon as he heard of the unfortunate soldier's doom, and begged that his life might be spared. The soldier had offended, it was true, but still the offence was trivial—far too trivial to be expiated by a terrible death. Bragg replied that there had been too much grumbling among the Kentucky troops, and he intended to stop it, if he had to shoot every man of them. Breckinridge replied that Kentuckians were not used to be treated like slaves. Bragg retorted that they might get used to that or any other treatment he saw fit to give them, as soon as they pleased. For his part he would a little rather take a Kentuckian for a warning than anybody else. Breckinridge said that the Kentuckians were ready to spill their last drop of blood to unite their State with the South. Bragg retorted that they had a queer way of showing it, if they felt that way. But d—n Kentucky. He was fighting not for her, but for the Confederacy; not for what he wanted, but for what he could get. Breckinridge then asked if no leniency could be extended to the unfortunate soldier of his division who was condemned to die. Bragg sharply answered, No. Breckinridge, then said the execution would be a military murder. Upon Bragg immediately ordered him to be placed under arrest. The news of the arrest flew like wildfire throughout the Kentucky camps, and created a storm of excitement and indignation. Company after company rushed out and stacked their arms, refusing to obey any orders until their General was released. Revolt and secession were the watchwords of the Kentucky troops at that time. A most alarming condition of affairs existed in the rebel army, and Bragg, not daring to proceed any further, telegraphed to Jeff. Davis to come and settle the broil. Davis came and Breckinridge was released, but the soldier was shot. The difficulty was not settled, and Bragg, in solemn silence, waited for a chance to revenge himself. At Murfreesboro, after he had fully determined to retreat, he ordered Breckinridge on Saturday night, with devilish refinement of malice, to make an attack on our lines, which he must have known would be unsuccessful. Breckinridge and his Kentucky troops obeyed the order, and were repulsed with a shocking loss. They were literally cut to pieces. The only thing which Bragg regretted was that Breckinridge was not left on the field as poor Hanson was, and that his division was not exterminated.

SELECT TALE.

A ROGUE'S LIFE.

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

I was shown into a morning-room exactly like other morning-rooms in country houses. After a long delay the doctor came in, with scientific butcher's sleeves on his arms, and an apron tied round his portly waist. He apologized for coming down in his working dress, and said everything that was civil and proper about the pleasure of unexpectedly seeing me again so soon. There was something rather pre-occupied, I thought, in those brightly resolute eyes of his: but I naturally attributed that to the engrossing influence of his scientific inquiries. He was evidently not at all taken in by my story about coming to Barkingham to fish: but he saw, as did I, the necessity of keeping up appearances, and contrived to look highly interested immediately in my parchment book. I asked after his daughter. He said she was in the garden, and proposed that we should go and find her. We did find her, with a pair of scissors in her hand, cutblooming the flowers that she was trimming. She looked really glad to see me: her brown eyes beamed clear and kindly; she gave my hand an inestimable shake: the summer breezes waved her black curls gently upward from her waist; she had on a straw hat, and a brown Holland gardening dress. I eyed it with all the practical interest of a linen-draper. O Brown Holland, you are but a coarse and cheap fabric, yet how soft and priceless you look when clothing the figure of Laura Knapton.

I lunched with them. The doctor referred to the subject of my angling intentions, and asked his daughter if she had heard what part of the stream at Barkingham were best for fishing in. She replied, with a mixture of evasiveness and adorable simplicity, that she had sometimes seen gentlemen angling from a meadow bank about a quarter of a mile below her flower-garden. I risked everything in my usual venturesome way, and asked if she would show me where the place was, in case I called the next morning with my fishing-rod. She looked dutifully at her father. He smiled and nodded. Inestimable parent!

On rising to take leave, I was rather curious to know whether he would offer me a bed in the house or not. He detected the direction of my thoughts in my face and manner and apologized for not having a room to offer me, every spare room in his house being occupied by his chemical assistants, and by the lumber of his laboratories. Even while he was speaking these few words, Laura's face changed, just as I had seen it change at our first interview. The downcast, gloomy expression overspread it again. Her father's eye wandered towards her when mine did, and suddenly assumed that distrustful look which I remembered detecting in it, under similar circumstances, at Dusky dale. What could this mean?

The doctor shook hands with me in the hall, leaving the workmanlike footman to open the door. I stopped to admire a fine pair of stag's antlers placed over it. The footman coughed impatiently. I still lingered, hearing the doctor's footsteps ascending the stairs. They suddenly stopped; and there was a low, heavy clang, like the sound of a closing door made of iron, or of some other unusually strong material: then total silence, interrupted by another impatient cough from the workmanlike-footman. After that, I thought my wisest proceeding would be to go before my mysterious attendant was driven to practical extremities.

Between thoughts of Laura and inquisitive yearnings to know more about the doctor's experiments, I passed rather a restless night at my inn. The next morning, I found the lovely mistress of my destiny, with the sofoss of shawls on her shoulders, the brightest of parasols in her hand, and the smart little straw hat, of the day before, on her head, ready to show me the way to the fishing-place. If I could be sure beforehand that these pages would only be read by persons actually engaged in the making of love—that oldest and longest established of all branches of manufacturing industry—I could go into some very tender and interesting particulars on the subject of my first day's fishing, under the adorable auspices of Miss Knapton. But as I cannot hope for a wholly sympathetic audience—as there may be monks, misogynists, political economists, and other professedly hard hearted persons present among those whom I now address—I think it best to keep safe generalities, and to describe my love-making, in as few sentences as the vast, though soft, importance of the subject will allow me to use. Let me confess, then, that I assumed the character of a fastidious angler, and managed to be a week in discovering the right place to fish in—always, it is unnecessary to say, under Laura's guidance. We up the stream and down the stream on one side. We crossed the bridge, and went up the stream and down the stream on the other. We got into a punt, and went up the stream (with great difficulty) and down the stream (with great ease).—We landed on a little island, and walked all round it, and inspected the stream attentively from a central point of view.—We found the island damp, and went back to the bank, and up the stream again; and then, for the first time, the dear girl turned appealingly to me, and confessed that she had exhausted her artless knowledge of the locality. It was exactly a week from the day when I had first followed her into the fields with my fishing-rod over my shoulder, and I had never yet caught anything but Laura's hand, and that not with my hook. We sat down close together on the bank, entirely in consequence of our despair at not finding a good fishing-place. I looked at the brown eyes, and they turned observantly down the stream. I followed them, and they turned away inquiringly up the stream. Was this angel of patience and kindness still looking for a fishing-place? And was it up the stream after all? No!—she smiled and shook her head when I asked the question, and the brown eyes suddenly stole a look at me. It could hold out no longer. In one breathless moment I caught hold of both her hands—in one stammering sentence, I asked her if she would be my wife.

She tried faintly to free her hands—gave up the attempt—smiled—made an attempt to look grave—gave that up, too—sighed suddenly—checked herself suddenly—said nothing. Perhaps I ought to have taken my answer for granted: but the least business-like man that ever lived always becomes an eminently practical character in matters of love. I repeated my question. She looked away confusedly; her eye lighted on a corner of her father's red-brick house, peering through a gap in the plantation already mentioned; and her blushing cheeks lost their color instantly. I felt her hands grow cold, she threw her hands resolutely out of mine, and rose with tears in her eyes. Had I offended her?

"No," she said, when I asked the question, and turned to me again, and held out her hand with such frank, fearless kindness that I almost fell on my knees to thank her for it.

Might I hope ever to hear her say 'Yes' to the question I had asked on the river bank.

She sighed bitterly and turned again towards the red-brick house.

Was there any family reason against her saying 'Yes?' Anything that I must not inquire into? Any opposition to be dreaded from her father, perhaps?

The moment I mentioned her father, she shrank away from me, and burst into a violent fit of crying.

"Don't speak of it again!" she said, in a broken voice. "I must not—you must not—O, don't say a word about it. I am not distressed with you—it is not your fault. Don't say anything—leave me quiet, for a minute. I shall soon be better if you leave me quiet."

She dried her eyes directly, with a shiver, as if it was cold, and took my arm. I led her back to the house-gate, and then, feeling that I could not go into lunch, as usual, after what had happened, said I would return to the fishing place.

"Shall I come to dinner this evening?" I asked, as I rang the large gate-bell for her.

"O, yes—yes!—do come, if he might be——"

The mysterious man-servant opened the door, and we parted before she could say the next words.

I went back to the fishing place with a heavy heart, overcome by mournful thoughts, for the first time in my life. It was plain that she did not dislike me, and equally plain that there was some obstacle connected with her father, which forbade her to listen to my offer of marriage.—From the time when she had accidentally looked toward the red-brick house, something in her manner, which it is quite impossible to describe, had suggested to my mind that this obstacle was not only something she could not mention, but something that she was partly ashamed of, partly afraid of and partly doubtful about. What could it be? How had she first known it? In what way was her father connected with it?

In the course of our walks she had told me nothing about herself that was not perfectly simple and unsuggestive. Her mother had died when she was about four teen years old. While she growing up she lived with her father and mother in Paris, where the doctor had many friends—for all of whom she remembered feeling more or less dislike, without being able to tell why. They had then come to England, had lived in lodgings in London, and had removed to their present abode after her mother's death, taking a whole house to themselves to give the doctor full accommodation for the carrying on of his scientific pursuits. He often had occasion to go to London; but never took her with him. The only woman at home now, besides herself, was an elderly person, who acted as cook and house keeper, and who had been in their service for many years. It was very lonely sometimes, not having a companion of her own age and sex; but she had got tolerably used to bear it, and to amuse herself with her books, and music, and flowers. Thus far she chatted about herself quite freely; but when I tried, even in the vaguest manner, to lead her into discussing the causes of her strange, secluded life, she looked so distressed, and became so suddenly silent, that I naturally refrained from saying another word on the topic. One conclusion, however, I felt sincerely sure that I had drawn correctly from what she had said; her father's conduct towards her, though not absolutely blameable or grossly neglectful on any point, had still never been of a nature to make her ardently fond of him. He performed the ordinary paternal duties rigidly and respectably enough; but he had apparently not cared to win filial love which his daughter would have bestowed on a more affectionate man.

PITTSBURGH PRODUCE MARKET.

OFFICE OF THE DAILY POST, Tuesday, Feb. 17th, 1863.

Remarks—We have nothing very special to note to-day, as the demand for the leading articles is limited. The weather for some days past has been very pleasant for the season, in fact, it resembles May far more than February. The present rise in our rivers has enabled what coal there was on hand to proceed to the lower markets. Unfortunately most of the Diggers are still holding out for another advance, so that the amount to go forward at the present time ranges between six and seven thousand bushels, making the total exports, since January 1st, about 1,500,000 bushels. Oils—The Oil Exchange meetings continue to be well attended. The sales yesterday were light, but there is, however, some large transactions under negotiation, which will, no doubt, be consumated in a few days. A dispatch from Oil City, dated the 15th, says that Oil Creek is too low for boating purposes. Flour—We could perceive no difference in the feeling in regard to this article for some days past. Both buyers and sellers say they can wait till their turn comes, and wait seems to be the order of the day. The receipts are on the increase. The stocks, however, are not large. Bacon firm, with a good demand for local purposes. There is a good deal changing hands in a quiet way. The article cured by our Packers is a very choice production. Grain—The various descriptions are firm, are held, generally, at an advance. There is, however, very little to operate on. Groceries continue firm. There is a good deal doing in a small way. The present look forbids anything like a decline in prices.

Dried Fruit—Holders have put off the rates.

Flour—Sales 105 bbls Extra—$6 25@6 50 Union Family, $7 10@7 40, as per quality; 84 do $7 25@7 50; 50 do do.

Hay—The receipts are on increase; sales 20 loads at $14@16.

Corn—Sales of 16 bbls. in lots, at 16c.

Butter—The market continues firm with moderate demand; sales 8 bbls. medium to fair, at 20@22c; 12 bbls do. very prime, 24c; packed sells at 18@19c.

Dried Fruit—The market is very firm at the late advance. Sales 150 bushels Apples, $1 25@1 37½; 100 bushels Peaches, $2 50.

Oils—Sales 100 bbls Refined, light straw color, 35½c; 80 do do 36c; Benzole firm at 21½@22c.

Whiskey—Sales of city rectified at 30@30½c.

Bacon firm; sales 30,000 lbs. Pitt Hams, 5½c; S. C. Hams, 10¾@10½c. Sides, 7½@8c Shoulders, 6c.

Lard—Sales of city at 10¾@10½; country at 9c.

Groceries—Firm. We omit quotations.

Dried Beef—Steady; sales 8 c. at 11c.

Cheese—Sales 90 boxes W. R. at 11@12½.

The Third Rise of Coal for 1863.

Another rise in both rivers has caused a slight activity among our coal-boat men. The unfortunate state of affairs existing among the diggers and the heavy coal dealers left but a small amount on hand to go out on the present rise, there being only a small number of the diggers at work. The prospect for the shipment of coal hereafter, is certainly not very brilliant. The amount that has gone forward this rise was only 663,000 bushels. This, together with the amount that went forward in January, makes a total for 1863, of 1,362,000 bushels:
