DAILY POST.

Death of a Prominent Colored Mason.

An immense concourse of our most respectable and wealthy colored people gathered on Monday to bury one of their number. The deceased was named Edward M. Thomas. Few colored men in the country possessed a more extensive acquaintance. He was for twenty-five years a runner for the House of Representatives at Washington, and, by a long continued course of fidelity and affability had gained the respect and confidence of every member of Congress and habitue of the House. Anecdotes concerning him have been narrated by the score. He accumulated some property in Washington, and leaves a family in very comfortable circumstances. The deceased was one of nine in this country who have received the degree of Sublime Princes of Jerusalem, a degree conferred in England, only, from whence colored Masons in this country derive their charters. He was Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the District of Columbia, and Past Right Worthy National Grand Chief of the Independent Order of Good Samaritans and Daughters of Samaria.—Philadelphia American.

OTHELLO AND THE COUNTRYMEN.

BY AN OLD STAGER

We were making the best of our way between Eastport and Portland, Me., playing at every considerable, and at many inconsiderable villages. Our first detour from Moose Island brought us to Lubec, and the drama was never represented before a rougher set of Christians or Pagans than those which our performance drew together. When these raw down-Easters became interested in the progress of the play the expression of their countenances was grotesque in the extreme; and Pope must have caught his idea of the proper study of mankind being Man, while looking through a hole in some stroller's back drop. The play was Othello, and A. A. Adams (in his younger days, the brightest dramatic genius our country has yet produced) the hero. One huge lumber-man, who sat on the front bench, seemed actually to be endeavoring to imitate the Moor's display; his soul was in the scene before him. His eyes protruded as though they were starting from his head. Every movement of Othello's body seemed instantly communicated to that of his intense auditor. When Iago had succeeded in thoroughly arousing the jealousy of the General, the lumber-man clapped his hands on the knees of his neighbors who sat on either side of him. I expected them to start up from the ponderous blow, as his fists descended, but they were too intent upon the scene to notice any mere physical objects. As Adams gave the lines—

> "I'd rather be and toad a live upon
> The vapor of a dungeon, than keep
> A corner in the thing I love
> For others' uses."

h tremendous energy, and the enormous ber-man sprang to his feet, bringing two neighbors with him with a jerk, shouted, with a voice which might e cracked the roof:

'Nor I, nyther; by lightnin! I'd go to fust, all standin'!"

hen the confusion which this unhappy break had partly subsided, and our had been admonished to "get down ont," another interruption, growing, emed, out of the first, once more e the blank verse half.

say, Zeke," roared the man sitting e right of our hero, "when you jump- jist now, by hokey, if you didn't tear rousers all to scrimtion, you did, by !"

ke's left hand neighbor had just made ame discovery, and thus communi- it:

y thunder, Zeke, fun's fun; but n't stand this! All the while that feller was a screechin' out, I didn't othin' about your diggin your fin- clean into the muscles of my leg; I be lame for a month! But what I urtest agin is the way you've slivered y Sunday pants! How am I to hide racter?"

Oh, shet up!" said Zeke, sugrily; 're stoppin' the show. Look there, them folks is standin' stock still, n' at you. Go on, showman; never d these fellers with their trousers."

The play drew towards its conclusion, and when Desdemona was smothered, Zeke seemed to undergo a similar strangulation. He assured Othello, in short sentences, that she was innocent, and if he killed her he would be sorry for it, &c., &c., and when at length the Moor discovers the treachery of Iago, Zeke shouted in triumph—

"There, you timber-headed nigger! aint I been telling you so all along?"

Theatrical Quarrel.

Laura Keene has got into a difficulty with Raymond and Lenox, two members of her company. The latter asks the public, in a card, for justice, alleging that they have been causelessly left out in the cold some months before the close of the season; while Laura claims some consideration for retaining them ever since New Year's day, when they forfeited their engagements by refusing to perform on the afternoon of that day. The "outs" had a benefit at the Winter Garden last evening.

The Blossom of the Shamrock.

The warmth of the Irish heart was pleasantly manifested at the dinner of the Friendly sons of St. Patrick last night. Mr. Barny Williams, the eminent comedian rose to put in a plea for the suffering poor in Ireland. He said that he had understood that a great scarcity of food exists in the old country, and that he believed that while we sent contributions to the Lancashire operatives, It was but right that other suffers should receive a share of our bounty. He therefore proposed to give a professional benifit at the Academy of Music, free of expences, for the purpos of furnishing means to aid the destitute people in Ireland, pledging himself to make up the difference if the recips should fall short of one thousand dollars. The President of the St. Andrew's Society immediately offered a subscription, on behalf of its members, of five hundred dollars for the same object, a Boston Irishman who said "he had recently won a bet of $100," offered that sum to aid the enterprise; and Mr Ball, Vice President of the friendly Sons, put the cap-sheaf upon these bundles of golden grain by announcing that Mr. A. T. Stewart had already chartered a ship at his own expense, to be filled with food for the destitute Irish and sent forthwith to them from this port.

Our Irish fellow citizens, always active in works of charity or patriotism, have keen ears for the cry of distress, and no man suffers when they have the chance of helping him. Among all the incidents of the celebration of yesterday, there was no finer tribute than this to the memory of their Patron Saint.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Death of another Catholic Clergyman.

The mortality among the Catholic clergy of this city has been, of late, a subject of serious moment to the laity of that faith, who can ill spare any of their priests, their number being now, it is said, too limited for the requirements of the diocese. Late on Sunday evening, Rev. Thomas Lilly died at the pastoral residence of St. Joseph's Church, of an attack of paralysis. The deceased was born in Adams county, of this State, October 3, 1806. At the completion of his studies he joined the novitiate. He was employed in the college several years, and then became pastor of a church in Frederick, Maryland. At the death of Father Carbrey, of the Church of St. Enegas, (Ignatius,) St. Mary's county, Maryland, he became pastor, and subsequently removed to Philadelphia, and has since been connected with St. Joseph's.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A General's Pocket Picked.

On Wednesday, Gen. Buford had his pocket picked of $1,900, while crossing the street from the Treasury Department in Washington City, where he had just drawn the money.

Planting Cabbages.

A correspondent of the Mark Lane Express, who highly extols the cabbage for feeding milch cows, store cattle, sheep and swine, and more especially for spring feeding of lambing ewes, says that the average product per acre in England may be stated at 25 tons. He gives the following directions for planting them:

The cabbage plants freshly drawn from the nursery-bed, with the extreme end of the slender fibrous root cut off, are brought to the field, and immersed in tubs of water, with the roots downwards, and taken from the vessels as the plants are required for use. Persons provided with dibbles insert the plants on the top of the drills, at the distance of two feet from each other, making a hole with the dibble for the insertion of the plant to the depth it has stood in the nursery bed, and pushing with the dibble the sides of the hole together, in order to give the plant a firm position. It must be very carefully observed not to insert the plant deeper or more shallow than they stood in the nursery-bed, as a transformation of the exposed or earthed up skin is the consequence, and a necessary delay in the onward progress of the plant. All plants with a large foliage require much moisture and the dung that is used for cabbage must be thoroughly moist, and even wet, whether it be cool or fermented; the plants immersed in water, and the insertion in the ground should be performed in the wettest weather in which the work is possible to be done. When any plants are seen to be dead, the places must be immediately filled with fresh plants in order to secure a full crop all over the field.

OFFICE OF THE DAILY POST,
Saturday, March 21st, 1863.

Remarks—The weather was changeable; we have pleasant March weather. Our rivers are in fine navigable order, but as Government has monopolized all the steamboats in this vicinity, there will be but little done for a while. The tow-boat Shark, with a heavy tow of coal, from Pittsburgh, left for Cairo.

Cairo

River news scarce yesterday. Business dull.—Weather warm and pleasant. Everybody appears lazy and had slight touches of spring fever.

The Marine Brigade is still anchored in the river, above the Tuscumbia. They did not get off, but say they will leave to-day.

The ram Lancaster is ready to go with them.

The White Rose, with troops aboard, left for the Pass, in the afternoon.

St. Louis.

The river here is rising slowly. In the twenty-four hours ending at ten o'clock yesterday morning it had receded 18 inches, and was then 12 feet 8½ inches above low water mark in Dec. 1860.
