NAPOLEON'S THREE WARNINGS.

The celebrated Foché, Duke of Otranto, was retained but a short time, it is well known, in the service of the Bourbons after their restoration to the throne of France.

By degrees, as Napoleon assumed the power and authority of a king, every thing about him, even in the days of the conspiracy, began to wear a court-like appearance.

At one particular time the punctuality of Bonaparte in his attendance to mass was rather distressing to his wife.

After the audience of that day had passed Bonaparte expressed a wish for his dinner to be served in the garden.

"Citizen Consul," said he, "had you not struck the stone, and our drive, all would have been lost?"

"No word to them! The dangers of Josephine remain ignorant of the danger. Cambronne, tell none of them; and if the government journals say anything of it, do not contradict them."

the police interfere in any way. Have you taken care of the bomb and removed it?

"I have, comrade." "Come, then, let us again drive in the gallery. But the bourgeois Josephine sought for the elegant figure of the young girl."

The impatient First Consul, with his heron appearance in a frock coat, was the attendant paid by them to the servant girl. Their anxiety was fruitless. The girl was seen at a man's more.

The summer of Napoleon were chiefly spent at Malmation; the winters at St. Cloud, and the First Consul had been holding Court in the great apartment.

It was the 2d of the month, which the republicans well called noise, and, in the evening, Bonaparte entered his carriage to go to the opera.

At one particular time the punctuality of Bonaparte in his attendance to mass was rather distressing to his wife.

After the audience of that day had passed Bonaparte expressed a wish for his dinner to be served in the garden.

"Citizen Consul," said he, "had you not struck the stone, and our drive, all would have been lost?"

Thus, of three warnings, two were useless, because neglected until the danger was past.

"Oh," replied Ponche, "I know not with certainty. The Emperor, if he knew of the plot, seems to have kept the secret."

All that is known respecting the matter is that a female related to St. Regent, the author of the explosion of the street St. Nicholas, died at the house of Hol Bieca in 1837; and that around her neck was suspended, by a silk ribbon, a paper containing the following words:
