

The Union as it was. The Constitution of 1787.

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 1. DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION.

Pursuant to a resolution adopted by the Democratic State Central Committee, the Convention of Delegates, chosen by the Democrats throughout the State will assemble

AT HARRISBURG, On Wednesday, June 17, 1863. At 10 o'clock, A. M., to nominate Candidates for Governor and Judges of the Supreme Court, to be supported by the friends of the Constitution and Union at the ensuing election.

The Convention will also give expression to the sentiments of the Democrats of the State, who while their primary duty is to have averted present dangers, will, nevertheless, devote the historic patriotism of our great Party to rescue the Constitution and the Union, one from usurpation, the other from final disruption.

F. W. HUGHES, Chairman Democratic State Central Committee. POTTSVILLE, May 26, 1863.

THE HOME LEAGUE EXPERIMENT.

A PIOUS DODGE.

The crushing disaster which overtook abolitionism last fall, was stunning to the magnates of that organization; they were petrified with the sudden uprising of the people, emphatically in condemnation of radical teaching.

After recovering from their prostration, they consulted together and resolved to change the name of their party. "Loyal League" was the name chosen.

It is stated in a recent letter that the "campaign for the Presidency in 1864 had been opened by the Union men."

It now appears that these utterances of Forney were premature; but Forney can never regret when his talking will give himself the slightest importance.

He is what is vulgarly termed a blatherer, and will talk more in five minutes than he will make good in five years.

He likes to hear himself talk, and his principal weakness is to be considered the chief of some cunning, even if a desperate and profligate political or partisan experiment.

In the members of this organization, his impudence, in announcing the object of the League, has put its wisest members to thinking, in order to divert it of all partisan appearances.

Let us learn what the history of Lord Danmore's proclamation teaches us. Let us learn what the frequent expressions of loyalty to our Administration, and whose conduct of the war has enabled these leaguers and contractors to accumulate fabulous fortunes, across upon their ears like sweet music's "voluptuous swell."

Some people, whose brains are always muddy, are often convinced through the medium of their stomachs, and of all the epics we have ever seen, "deliciously rare morsels, we know of none more destructive, than a rotund lay churchman's

After strengthening the clerical gentlemen with the table's "generous burden," which they "gradually removed," the real business of the occasion was commenced.

The late expedient of using a body of religious ministers, however, demonstrates that he is still full of political strategy, while his speech proves him to be a demagogue of the most dangerous and pestilent character.

Lord Lytton stated in an official dispatch that he had made use of the word "conversion" in question, and now after eighteen months have elapsed, we have seen no contradiction of his Lordship's revelation.

to all indentured servants and negroes being thereby to oblige the rebels, to dispose and take care of their families in accordance with the proclamation.

The English historian, Bissett, says: "The British government, in its proclamation, was not so much a declaration of war, as a declaration of indignation against the rebels."
