Thom the National Intelligencet.
Our esteemed contemporary, the New York Observer, gives in its last number a letter from a subscriber in one of the Southern States, where the protection of the General Government has been so far extended that the facilities of the mails are now enjoyed. In this letter the writing and night before the battle; over frightful precipices, through gloomy can one and chasms unrod by men, rout a number of savages, killing over fifty, wounding as many, taking ten prisoners and sixty head of stock, without the loss of more than one man, is something for emulation to others in future campaigns against Apaches. All we have to mourn over is the brave and generous youth who fall doing his duty, Mr. Thomas C. McClelland, the only one who fell in this brilliant engagement; he will long be I would gladly write much about church mourned by those who knew him only to esteem him as a good citizen, a dutiful son and a firm friend.
