Even if our contemporary were not drafted, there is no excuse, he could make that would justify him in remaining a home in such a crisis as the present; bu now that he is, (it may be Providentially, drafted, we trust that our citizens will see that he hastens to the field with all convenient dispatch.

In the paragraph we have quoted, the writer shows a half dozen blunders at least upon the part of the Administration, because of not having a common sense man at the head of our army. "Common sense," he also informs us, is but "military talent acting rapidly and intuitively," and to our want of it, are we to attribute Lee's escape across the Potomac. WHO IS RESPONSIBLE? Our readers remember that at the tim Gen. Meade gave hattle to Lee's forces, at Gettysburg, the Administration did not know in what direction Meade really was; but, notwithstanding this, as soon as they found that our arms were successful, they began to spread themselves to a most lu dicrous extent. Stant on and Halleck made speeches to a crowd of serenaders, in which they took all the credit of Meade's officer's name in all their buncombe. They complimented each other, however, in the eartiest manner. Having taken all the credit for Lee's defeat, we should like to know who are responsible for his safe return to Virginia? This must be explained, and we presume it will be, in the usual manner-by dismissing Meade, and giv. ing out as a reason, through the pensioned papers, that he did not "bag" Lee's ar my, in accordance with "instructions' from Gen.
