The meed of praise appears to be bestowed upon Colonel Gallagher and his regiment exclusively, when in fact the regiments of Colonel Porter and Colonel Bemus, coatributed just as much towards he glorious result. None of the Pennylvania regiments had an opportunity to attack the rebels, but were so posted by their different commanders, under instruc tions from Gen. Brooks, as to cut off their retreat to the river. :- Colonel Porter's regiment was first posted on the roads leading from the interior to Warrenton Ferry It was at this point that Morgan attempted to cross the river on Friday night and Saturday morning, but his scouts found the roads leading to it so closely guarded by Col. Porter's Regiment that he turned northward, via Smithfield and Richmond.

The Regiments of Cols. Potter and Bemus were then moved to the woods above Steubenville, the former occurying the roads leading from Richmond to the Ohio river at Island Creek ford.
