To the Editor of the Lexington (Ky. ) Observer and Reporter: It is always with regret that I find my self constrained to appeal to the public press for any personal explanation. The peculiar language of the resolution in which the nomination of me as a cardidate for Congress was made by the Dis trict Convention which met at Lexington olution is in the following words: "Resolved, That the Hon. John J. Crit tenden having expressed himself publicly as unconditionally in favor of put ing down the rebellion, by voting, if necessary, the last man and the last dollar of the ry, the last man and the last doing of the nation for that purpose, we present his name to the people of this Congressional District as the Union candidate for re-

It is probable that the author of the think I did make them) having used the phrases employed in the resolution, yet it would have been strange if on that occasion, I, who had all along, in Congress in season and out of season, avowed myself in favor of putting down the rebellion at all hazards and by all the lawful means in state its opinion on the changes of surpressions it may be stated. all hazards and by all the lawful means in our power, should have failed to express the same estiments. I did express them strongly—not as one seeking favor for him self, but as one earnestly endeavoring to impress upon the hearts of his country men a great national sentiment and duty.

The resolution, or rather the recital to it, is perhaps remarkable in several respects, but conscious that the great body of the Convention (and hoping that there is not a single exception) did not intend to cast any reflection upon me, I do not design to say a word except in relation to a ingle view of the subject. An effort has been made, taking that resolution as the foundation for it, to pro-duce the impression that I came under some promises or pledges, or had taken some new position that would require me to change my course in the ensuing Congress from what it had been in the last.

Shortly after the publication of the resoution the following editorial notice appeared in the Cincinnati Gazette: "Hon. John J. Crittenden was unaninously nominated for Congress, in the

With great respect, yours, J. J. CRITTENDEN. Napoleon on Centralization. The following important letter of Louis Napoleon on Centralization, has been written by the Emperor to M. de Rouher, President of the Council of State:

Formerly, the incessant control by the administrative departments of a vast num ber of affairs had, perhaps, some reason, but now this supervision, is only an ob struction. In fact, how is it possible to understand that some mere communal matter of secondary importance, and to which no objection can be raised, should require an investigation extending over at least two years, caused by the necessity of reference to 11 different authorities?
