TEMPORARY ANARCHY IN THE CASE OF 'HEDDERS.'

But the upper-class politicians have not hitherto patronized the rabidly incendiary element in foreign communities. Neither have Englishmen, in their worst frenzies, been characterized by the ferocious cowardice and cruelty of the "Bovary boys." We do not remember an English riot in which assumption, the grandest of incendiarian, and men were burned as well as houses. We cannot conceive even of a riot in which the British flag was being demolished in an orphan asylum, or in a hospital, or in a place where the women and children of an abandoned nation were crowded together in a place of refuge. The very words of roughs are content to make war upon men and property. They do not extend the rudeness of their most heinous and profane outrages to the property of a nation. It is the peculiarity of an American mob that it uses the bow-knife and the revolver, the bayonet and the tar-bucket, as well as the crowbar and the torch, with the indiscriminating fury of devils let loose, and it is a peculiarity that can be traced to nothing in American character or society but the influence of the slave and the property of a nation. The great commercial city of the North that has not, at one time or another, been carried into a state of lawlessness, in which the property of a nation is treated as a mere thing to be sacrificed for the sake of a momentary and lawless victory, is either a city of the future, or a city of the past, or a city of the present.

EUROPE.

The American Topic.

(From the London Daily News.)

Those of our contemporaries who, up to the end of last week, continued to assest that the surrender of Vicksburg "is at least not certain," must really have moved a little faster, or their comments on the American war will soon be two or three months in arrears. Before they have "recognized" the fall of Vicksburg we have the news not only that Port Hudson has been unconditionally surrendered, but that Sherman's victorious army under Gen. Sherman had marched against Gen. Johnston, defeated him in a pitched battle with heavy losses, and forced the only remaining Confederate force in the West into a precipitate retreat. The news from the East does not in the least help to counterbalance the total collapse of the Confederacy on the Mississippi. General Lee, instead of remaining north of the Potomac and defeating the Federal army by means of the large reinforcements he was said to have received, has hastily crossed the river, and is in full retreat towards Richmond. Nor is the latest intelligence from the centre of this vast area of military operations at all more encouraging to the Confederate cause. General Bragg appears not to have passed in the fight even at the entrenched camp of Chattanooga, which we have been repeatedly told was impregnable, but he has retreated to Atlanta, abandoned miles further South. At the same time a Federal force has been ordered to Charleston, and succeeded in establishing itself on the two islands which form the mouth of the harbor. There is no doubt, nothing to console the world's feelings, or to mitigate in any way, the severe and just indignation of the friends of the human and enlightened hope of the world. The only consolation to be derived from the New World. Not at one point only, but at every point in a line of military operations extending over more than a thousand miles, the Confederates are forced helplessly back. On the Mississippi and in the West the war is virtually over, the enemy's strongholds being captured, and his armies destroyed; while in the centre and in the East the only organized force that still keeps in the rear in full retreat.
