A soldier by the name of Wm. Frazer, was brutally murdered in Cumberland, Md., last Thursday night. He entered a saloon with four members of a Maryland Company, and soon after got into a quarrel with them, when two of them seized him, and he was stabbed five times; twice in the back, once in the breast, once in the forehead, and once in the side of the neck. Two of the murderers escaped, but the other two were placed in jail heavily ironed. Frazier left a wife and three children residing in Wheeling.

The stores in Wheeling were all closed, and the people were very anxious for the presence of some of Uncle Sam's boys.

Burning of the Steamer Ruth.

Suspicion of foul play in the recent burning of the steamer Ruth on the Mississippi river entertained. It is alleged that the large amount of money presented to be on board for the payment of the soldiers in Gen. Grant's army could not have been burned, and it is suspected that the money was not on board, but that the steamer was destroyed to conceal an enormous robbery. The matter is to be subjected to a rigid investigation.

He Still Lives.

Matthew Green was still alive last night, although some of his attendants thought that mortification was about to ensue. Men do wonders recover from the effects of awful wounds, but we think that Green's case is about as hopeless as a man with his head cut off.
