sites, who live on public favor, as true to the 'nation's life,' and all honesily dif-fering with them false. What is "the life of the nation," other than the liberty c the people? And how becoming it is for him to speak of the liberties of the peo-ple, or "the life of the nation," who has blotted from the Constitution every guar antee of human rights, and declared mar tial law over a free and peaceable people He says the rebellion is wrong, wicked, unboly, causeless. Grant it. That it should be put down by force of arms. Grant it. That this is the only way.

Grant it—grant everything he claims. Still he has committed such atrocities as have never been perpetrated in any civil ized country. After all this, as though he were addressing a benighted people, he adds: "I freely acknowledge myself to be the servant of the people according to the bond of service, the United States Constitution, and that as such. I am res ponsible to them." To this responsibility let him be held, and by it let him be He has proclaimed his own will as law above the Constitution of the country, o the enactments of Congress and Legisla tures. The President is the creature of law—the law makes and defines his duties.

As an executive officer it is his duty to see that the laws are executed. As a mil tary officer, he is subject to laws made by Congress. The articles of war, which govern him, are simply law. Every offi car appointed by him is paid by law-is powerless without law. His term of office in the grant of the people, through the Constitution. He holds it just as long as the Constitution prescribes. In the exercise of his office, he finds precedents in menstrons acts of Kings who held their power independent of Constitutions. In precisely the same manner, and upon the same perverted rule of law, when he is business of great importance to be transacted in the same perverted rule of the articles. of war, he follows the precedents of Mili-tary Dictators, who had no articles of war but their own will, and no principles of justice but brute force.

This manner of government and this rule of the application of precedents. resolves the civil power into a despotism. and fastens the military power upon the necks of the people as a perpetual yoke. The President can have no authority which he does not receive directly from the Constitution, in such plain language as may admit of no legal doubt. No law which is in conflict with the Constitution can give him such power. As Command er-in Chief, governed by the articles of war, he has no discretionary right to vio. He is stopping at the St. Charles Hotel late them; and if Congress, in the articles and will address the Democracy this after of war, were to confer on the Commander in Chief discretion to violate the Const. tution, the authority would be illegal and

The theory of our governments is a plain and simple one. Upon this principle rests everything—that all power of covernment is derived from the people. The people are above Constitutions, and because it is their own act.

The civil law is nothing more than a rule adopted by the people for the regulation of their own conduct, and the spensibility of their own officers. ilitary power is none other than a physical agency used by the civil power to enforce its mandates.

Whenever the military becomes superior to the civil authority, then government assumes precisely the character of the man whose brutal powers demand the night to control his reason. It leaves him a brute and a maniac. Government, where the military is superior to the civil power, is but little else than a raving savage beast, destructive alike of the laws of reason and the purposes of soa this light, precisely, has the President viewed, and in this manner has he treated the theory of our government. He has placed the arbitrary, unreasoning power of military brute force above Constitutions, above law, above government. above the people. This is his theory,

Again, he says: "I think that the Constitution invests its Commander in Chief with. the law of war in the time of war," Grant Sicux Indian, which puts men to death indiscriminately, burns houses, lays cities in ashes, defaces tomb stones, defiles he is "invested ?" Is it the larv of an autocrat, which may designate its victims at whim, and shoot them down at pleasure: or is it the law of a military dicta tor, who lone of the "Embargo" law, because they claim the right to do by revolution? Here again no resident rails into the same mistake as a military chieftain, that he persits in as the Chief Magistrate of the el with an agent of the British ministry, and the settled maxims of the law of the country. The military law of the United States is written law, as clear, full war-'the Union has been long since virand authoritative as the law regulating the collection of taxes, imposts, excises and gland political preacher, "and this part duties. This military law is made by Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, gress in pursuance of the Constitution, and is binding upon every officer of the army, including the Commander in Chief, gland Governors refused to respond to the delphia Age which speaks for itself: "We and their freign alies. MRS. PRESIDENT LINCOLN. The Washington Chronicle, the organ of the Kitchen Cubinet the other day contained quite an elaborate notice of Mrs. Lincoln's last visit to New York. Last summer, we remember that the distin guished lady visited one of our men of war, then anchored near the battery, and there mingled beautifully with dashing and gay society. This time we see nothing very extraordinary in Mrs. Lincoln's visit o Gotham, save the minuteness with which her smallest movements are chronied, for the information of the bloods in Washington. She attended NIBLO'S Garden, one evening, not to see Forrest in ARTACIS, but a German tragedian in HYLOCK; and so delighted was she with , that she invited the talented TEUTON to dine with her next day. Ha accepted the invitation of course, and after partaking of the "roast the bake and boil," he recit ed some choice bits from the play in ques tion. The lines spoken by Bassino, after
