For us dark wends be worn, Emblems of human wee! While she on angels' wings and

From the Chicago Times, Oct. 23 Vevy late Wednesday afternoon, a la porce, returning home from work while passing along West Lake street near the city limits, came upon a man stretched upon the ground, who was apparently stupid from intoxication. His hat lay a few feet distant, and the remainder of his attire was soiled and dirty, though otherwise they were in good condition, and, being of good quality, indicated that their wearer was well to do in the world. But his liair was frowzy and nucombed, and his eyes were fearfully send to combed, and the services of the services. his eyes were fearfully swellen; mureover, the man's leatures showed the ravages of dissipation. No one could have looked upon him as he lay there in that sad condition without evening from his course.

upon him as he lay there in that sad condition without evoking from his own heart a testing of charity. A drunkard, even, would have drawn from the spectacle a lesson ever to be recollected. Yet that was only an ordinary spectacle. Every, body has seen the like, at least once in his lifetime. And the laborer, therefore, only stopped a minute, and then went on his stopped a minute, and then went on his way, now hastening his footsteps that he might the scorer rest himself from the toil of the day, and gather renewed cause or thankfulness and strength for to mor

It was growing dark. The deepening gloom would soon hide the distresses of the stranger from the gaze of the curiona. A group of children returning that way from school also found him. To them, at least, all inexperienced, and happily unabilled to the world the world the right skilled in the ways of the world, the sight was a novel one. They laid down their baskets, and shouted aloud a hubbuh of childish clamour, and danced gleefully around the sleeper. Still he did not move. Not a stir, not a look, nor a word did the boys arouse. did the boys arouse. For in their inno-cence of feeling they little imagined the bastly mockery of their sport. The strange man was dead !
And when this was ascertained, a few tripped and fell forward upon the road way, elightly injuring his nose. He had no change wherewith to pay his return lare. And having been left there by the conductor, he sat down on the sidewalk and commenced to fondie a dog. Further than that until he was found dead, evidence was wanting. In his pockets were found accounts with subscribers, a few bank notes, and memoranda which, among other things, contained a record of a marriage solemnized by him in 1849. to leave the car near the city limits, he tripped and fell forward upon the road

Rich Ministers in New York. A New York correspondent of the Bos ton Post, in the course of a gossipping letter to that journal, touches on the subject of "rich ministers" in Gotham.
