It seems to me it is. By it all men beparture from the constitutional mode can not be considered necessary because of any defect in the organization of the militia, for Congress has always had authority to correct this, and it cannot possibly found new powers in its own neglect of duty. Most of the Presidents have repeatedly called the attention of Congress to this subject, and yet it has never been adequately attended to. I do not know why it might not have been performed since this rebellion commenced, and yet I seems a service of the distinction between State and Federal powers, and the army and militia forces become naturally confounded. do not know that it could.

The rule that what is not granted is reserved, operates in the same way, and is equivalent the largest bill of rights. No doub would be unreasonable to suppose the Congress would so disregard natural rights as to take such an advantage of this want of regulation of their power as above indicated; but the fathers of the Constitution did presume that some such things are possible, and therefore

OPINION OF LOWRIE, C. J.—There are claim relief against the defendants who acting under the act of Congress of the 3d of March last, well known as the Constitution Act, claim to coerce the plaintiffs to enter the army of the United States as drafted soldiers. The claim of the plaintiff is founded on the objection that that act is unconstitutional. The question is raised by a motion for a preliminary intentiff is founded on the objection that that act is unconstitutional. The question is raised by a motion for a preliminary intorther Woodward, who allowed the motion, and on account of the great importance of the question, we all agreed to sit together at the argument. But we are left to consider the subject without the aid of an argument of the constitution of the Government, the proper legal officers of the Government having decemed it their duty not to appear.

For want of this assistance I cadnot feel such an entire copyciction of tha truth.

That Constitution, adopting our historical experience, recognizes two sorts of military land forces—the militia and the army, sometimes called the regular, and sometimes the standing army—and deleincompatible with the provisions of the Constitution relative to the militia that it sometimes the standing army—and delegates to Congress power "to raise and support armies" and "to provide for calling struction only by the express or necessarily to implied terms of the law or compact in which the shatingth is provided for

It is, therefore, only upon the power to raise armies that this act can be founded, and as this power is undisputed, the question is made to turn on the auxiliary power of the power is undisputed, the question is made to turn on the auxiliary power is undisputed. The purpose is the terrefore a question of the mode of exercising the power of raising armies. Is it admissable to call forced recruiting a "necessary and proper" mode of exercising this power?

The fact of rabellion would not seem to make it sc, because the inadequacy or insufficiency of the permanent and active forces of the Government for such a case is expressly provided for by the power to call forth the usually dormant force, the militia; and that therefore, is the only remedy allowed, at least until it has been fully tried and failed, according to the further and active and maxims, expressio unius est exclusio alternation.
