correspondence of the N.Y. Times. CONDUCT 0 - THE WAR

tunnte,) events have vindicated that opinion to the very letter. It would have given me delight to have seen a triumphant march on Richmond, the capture of Charleston and the breaking down of the rebell armies. For the first three months of the war, up to August, 1861, I fell in with the multitude. I thought a gigantic effort would crush the rebellion, and I think so yet, if we had had the military genius to device and conduct a great plan, and had great armies. We had not, and when that became apparent, approaches in an enemy's country. Bull the heroic ages are past, and the genius of war must hereafter take its place among or Fredericks in our army, and we were obliged to adopt the slow method. On this plan, the anaconda system was the right one, and certainly we have broken the most powerful ribs of the tiger by the pressure of the anaconda. But even the anaconda most pressure of the anaconda. pressure of the anaconda. But even the anaconda mast press more at some points than others. It was palpable that the Mississippi River was the main line of attack and defence. It was palpable also that the lines of railroad converging from the Mississippi, or the interior Bouth, (which are absolutely necessary to maintain communication with the Mississippi,) could only be held permanently by holding the mountain passes of East Tennessee and North Carolina. They are the keys of the central South, which, possessed by an invading army, enables it to command of the central South, which, possessed by an invading army, enables it to command the whole interior of the country. A knowledge of the railroad systems of this country was the first thing required of a good General in this war; for a knowledge of that, a perfect knowledge of the topography of the country was necessary. But I see no evidence that any commanding General in the war had much break in good general in the war had much break in great the second groups of the country was necessary. ing General in the war had much knowledge of either. The railroad companies sent a great many energetic men to make Generals of; but where was there one who could take a coup d'ail of the whole passenger from or to any part of the old county? country? Where was there one who had studied its topography and resources?

But we must be content to work with the tools we have most fortunately, the rebels have no better. We could not hope that they should have Generals much interior to Brags. But when Vicksburg was taken, when the roads were open, when the weather was beautiful, what stopped our armies? What has lost, in a great measure, the splendid campaign which opened to the army of the process.

But let us process.

We have got the Mississispipi—got Bast Iron hessee. Providence compelled the Government to do at last what ought to have been done at first. Even the rebels did not comprehen the full importance of the properties of the properties, and they are prepared to offer musual indecements both to Wholesale and Retail Buyers of the properties of the very best quality; and the properties of our skirts is of the very best quality; and the properties of our skirts is of the very best quality; and the properties of our skirts is of the very best quality; and the properties of our skirts is of the very best quality; and the properties of the very best quality; and the properties of capacity.

But let us proceed. After two years, we have got the Mississippi—got East Ten. nessee. Providence compelled the Government to do at last liberty to consider him a man of superior beautiful, what stopped our armies? What has lost, in a great measure, the splendid campaign which opened to the army of Grant, and might have terminated the war? It is a part of military history that more campaigns have been lost by delays after victories than by defeats. Giving the month of July to Grant's army for rest and preparation, there remained three months, from Aug. 1 to Nov. 1, for the conquest of Alabama and Georgia. My letter to the Times in July last, will show that I thought that was the exact thing to where, uniting (in operation) with the Army of the Cumberland, Chattanooga where, uniting (in operation) with the Army of the Cumberland, Chattanooga would have been evacuated, Bragg forced to retire—Rome, Atlanta and Columbus, all have fallen, and the 1st of November would have found the rebel Confederacy denuded of the last hope of support.

Why was it not done? Grant had three COLDS: one of them was ample enough to Pittsburgh P. O.

One went to Arkansas, and one to Louisiana, or at least large parts of them. Now, what I wish to say is, that the capture of Little Rock and the march to Opelousas was not worth, as to determine the capture of Little Rock and the march to Opelousas was not worth, as to determine the capture of Little Rock and the march to Opelousas was not worth, as to determine the capture of ending the war, one straw. We cannot end the war by running after Price, Holmes, and Kirby Smith, beyond the Mississippi. Let them stay there, and dig and starve in the swamps of Arkansas and Louisiana. We must destroy the armies of Bragg and Les before we end the war. The op-portunity to do this in the most effectual manner was in August and September. manner was in August and September.

There is no disguising the fact that we lost the opportunity, and we lost it by the want of sagacity and energy in the supervising military mind, wherever that may be.

The battle of Chickamanga was fought because Rosecrans was not reinforced from Grant's army. It was fought for Castlanooga, and we hold it. That will be the answer which history gives to all who censure Gen. Rosecrans. But I desire not to enter upon any controverted questions.

The military positions I lay down will not be questioned by any man of missil.

The readers of the Times will bear me witness that I have uttered but one opin ion on the proper military mode of conducting the war, and that, unfortunately, (if the loss of time and money be unfortunate,) events have vindicated that opin—to to the very letter. It would have the Army of the Cumber—we must make the Army of the Cumber—we with resistless fary of the Cumber—we make the Army of the Cumber—we with resistless fary of the Cumber—we make the Army of the Cumber—we with resistless fary of the Cumber—we make the Army of the Cumber—we with resistless fary of the Cumber—we with the march of Grant were sentered on minor expeditions. We had not and when that became apparent, we had first to learn the art of war, and then to practice in the slow ways of the old method. Celerity of movement, with violent impingling attacks on single points by concentrated forces, constitute almost ril the art of a quick and vigorous war. Another kind of war—perhaps nore sure, but requiring far more time and cost—is that of gradual, permanent and cost—is that of gradual, permanent and cost—is that of gradual, permanent and the proposal surface and the genins when the proposal surface and the gradual permanent and the proposal surface are past, and the genins when the contest that we have no greater military approaches in an enemy's country.
