ITEMS.

Some of the Pennsylvania papers are advocating the Hon. SIMON CAMERON for the Vice-Presidency. The President's Message was published in the Montreal and Toronto papers on Thursday morning.

There are four hundred and eighty looms running in Massachusetts making balmain shirts. The office of the North Missouri Railroad was robbed of $36,000 on Wednesday night, in St. Louis.

Our total loss in the late operations in East Tennessee is estimated at 1,000, while that of the rebels is five times as many.

Last Sunday morning the Monitor Wee-hawken was sunk near Charleston. Thirty-seven men were lost, including three engineers, and one doctor.

The value of the steamer Chesapeake, recently captured by the rebels twenty-one miles from Cape Cod, is estimated at $60,000.

Governor BRANTLEY declines a nomination for the United States Senate, being content at present with the station he occupies.

Wm. B. STRACHAN, a prominent member of the Legislature, who has been under arrest on charges preferred against him, last acting as Provost Marshal of North Missouri, last summer, and since at large on parole, has been ordered to St. Louis for trial next week.

The Chicago Journal says that the Illinois Central Railroad has been so overwhelmed with Government freight for the past sixty days, that some of its cars have been detained for six weeks.

No more freight will be received until further notice. It is probable that Mr. STEVENS will be chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, but an effort was made at one time to have him put at the head of the Committee on Foreign Relations in order that Mr. WASHINGTON might be honored with the Chairmanship of the Ways and Means.

It is said that this project is abandoned. Among the many hoaxes told by John M. BERRY, in his letter to the Richmond Examiner, he said: "There is not one of those who would bring this war on, that would do it, with their present experience, it had to be gone over again, or they would have foregone on that."

The news from Mexico is not favorable to the JEROME Government, which is said to be powerless, while it is unpopularity, and is nearly everywhere prevailing. The death of COMMISSIONER, in a skirmish with some Mexican guerrillas, is announced. He was born at Puebla in 1814, and consequently was in his fifty-second year.

Over 200 companies and regiments belonging to different States are engaged in running the blockade at Wilmington, N. C. Gov. VANCE says in his recent message that the State of North Carolina is largely engaged in business, has recently received shipping enough through this channel to clothe her troops in January, 1863.

There are, perhaps, some printers in the army in proportion to the number in the country than of any other profession. Such was the fact in the Texan and Mexican wars. In the war for the suppression of the rebellion, the same is doubtless true. Among the number killed at the battle of Chickamauga, there were thirty-five printers and editors, showing that the types were in the foremost ranks, where balls flew thickest and thickest.

The Memphis Argus of the 10th instant, says: "Hon. W. K. SEBASTIAN arrived in the city yesterday morning from Helena, on his way, we understand, to attend the present session of Congress, he having two years yet to serve of his term as Senator from Arkansas. Mr. SEBASTIAN is generally recognized as a Union man, although he has very lately made an open avowal of Unionism."

Dr. BARCLAY of Philadelphia, so well and favorably known for his untiring devotion to the wants of our soldiers, especially the sick, wounded and prisoners, left Fort Sumter, by the day of truce boat on the 10th instant, for City Point, hoping to get permission to go to Richmond to minister to the wants of our unfortunate prisoners.

General HALLOCK censures General MADE, in the following terms, for permitting the escape of Lee from Pennsylvania: "Holding a way at Middleburg, General MADE crossed the South Mountain, and on the 12th of July the enemy occupying a strong position on the heights of Marsh ran in front of Williamsport. Instead of attacking Lee in this position, with the swollen waters of the Potomac in his rear, without any means of crossing his artillery, and when a defeat most have caused the surrender of his entire army, he was allowed time to construct a pontoon bridge with lumber collected from canal boats and the nearest wooden houses, and on the morning of the 12th his army had crossed to the south side of the river." This is plain talk.

It is known that efforts are making at New York to start a huge National Bank. We believe the intention is to start it with five millions of dollars, with the intention of ultimately increasing the amount, perhaps, to fifty millions of dollars. There is already $2,000,000 of the capital stock subscribed, and great efforts are being made to make up the balance. This bank will receive large deposits from contractors, and all those doing business with the Government. The policy of this institution will be to discourage indolence in stocks and produce, as it will be under the immediate patronage of Mr. CHASE, who is anxious to bring down the market price of all the necessities of life. This new policy is essential to a more economical administration of the Government, as well as to gain favor with the laboring classes, who find it difficult even with the recent advance in wages to live as well as before the war.

CONDITIONS OF THE REBELLION.

JEFFERSON DAVIS, in his message to the rebel Congress does not attempt to disguise the fact of the present year having been terribly disastrous to the success of the rebellion; but he adroitly argues that their reverses should only stimulate them to more determined resistance. It is with this in view that he argues a question of independence, or utter subjugation and slavery, if they fail. Governor LETCHER, too, in his late message, to the Virginia Legislature, echoes the sentiment of DAVIS; and, notwithstanding the serious disasters which have overtaken the insurgent cause, he breathes defiance to our arms, and a certainty of its final triumph. Speaking of Virginia, LETCHER remarks: "Look at the picture on all sides and it presents encouraging features. If we are only true to ourselves—to the cause, the country, we cannot be overthrown. If there is a man who doubts the success of the struggle, if there be such a one, he is a traitor at heart, who deserves to be cast out from among us."

"Kneeling around the altar of their country, her sons will swear allegiance to her fidelity to the Confederate Government, and their prayers will ascend to Heaven for blessings on Virginia and the Southern Confederacy." When we reflect that Virginia was among the last of the States in rebellion to accept the heresy of secession, and that since the war began she has been the principal sufferer, we are inclined to wonder that her retiring Chief Magistrate should breathe a spirit of such lofty defiance. The spirit of that ancient commonwealth has been dismembered, until these State jurisdictions hold sway within her limits. Her rich fields have been trodden under foot by the prancing, hostile cavalry; her burning barrens have given place to blast and desolation; the blood of thousands of her slain sons has polluted the earth which drank it, and yet her Governor—one of the last in Virginia to yield to secession—speaks in his last message to his people telling them that if "they are but true to themselves they will be overthrown." This spirit and confidence must be the result of desperate counsels, not the offspring of cool deliberation. Instead of their being calculated to "dishearten the friends of the Union, we take them as being the vapor of one whose brain has been turned by the very calamity which he both deplores and defies.

There are some indications, however, from the South, going to show that there is a rapid change going on in the sentiment in regard to the rebellion. Neither the spirit of DAVIS, or of LETCHER animates many, or, at the beginning of the rebellion, were the most intense in their determination for independence and secession. The recent demonstration of HENRY S. FORT, in the rebel Congress, is one of the most unpropitious signs of the times. He is represented as follows: "In the rebel Congress, on the 8th, Mr. FORT, of Tennessee, in a speech said that the President never visited the army without doing it injury. Never has he visited any of our armies but what it has been followed by disaster. He charges him with having ruined the country, and he would meet his champion anywhere to discuss it."

The significance of this speech of FORT, consists in the fact of his being one of the most ardent Unionists and a popular man in the country. He is possessed of the faculty which enables him to escape approaching political danger. He is satisfied of the probability of a possible success of the southern Confederacy he would be his boldest champion; perceiving its shrunken proportions he is preparing to lead in its internal prostration. In 1850, he mounted the Union cause in Mississippi; he had previously encountered Jay's opposition in the United States Senate upon the compromise measures of that year; their contest was removed to their State, each becoming the gubernatorial candidate of his respective party. After a most vigorous contest FORT triumphed over his opponent. After outliving the liking of the people of his State, he removed to California, where he became a furious Unionist. He was one of that class who who pretended to see great danger to our institutions from foreign influences, which influence consisted in the arrival every year in this country of a few unfortunate immigrants who poverty had driven to our shores. Know Nothingism not paying in California, FORT returned to Tennessee. In the Presidential campaign of 1856 he went for BELL, and EKKERTY and he retained secession as long as he was safe in doing so, but as soon as the rebels got the upper hand he went with them. Now, that Tennessee has been badly shaken by the Union succession, FORT is again about to jump to the popular cause. Such men, like water-clocks, are sure to indicate the direction in which the wind is blowing, and in this instance we regard FORT as the political thermometer indicating the condition of the Southern cause.

A GOOD APPOINTMENT. We have heretofore neglected, as we should, to notice the appointment of Colonel A. S. MONROE as the retiring position of military store keeper was resigned at the Albany Arsenal, vice Major JOHN B. BERRY resigned. We are pleased to see the appointing power conferring some of its favors upon those who were disabled for life in the cause of the Union. Young MONROE was among the first to respond to the call of the President. After entering the service he suddenly arose from rank to rank, until he was promoted to that of Major. He, as Colonel of his regiment, leading it in the thickest of the fight, received what was considered his death wound. For fifteen months he lingered between life and death, but is now happily recovered. He is a brave, young soldier, and his appointment to the position of store keeper is well merited credit upon the War Department.

While congratulating Col. MONROE upon his good fortune, we can not refrain from giving expression to regret at the retirement of Major BERRY. But having already reached a mellow old age, he felt himself justified in retiring from further public responsibility. He was a faithful officer, and did the State some service, not only as Quartermaster, but in several other responsible situations. He was Canal Commissioner of our State for several years, and was afterwards Quartermaster

IN THE WAR IN MEXICO.

On more than one occasion, he was in the field in that country, and he did a soldier's duty.

REBELS' SUPPLIES REFUSED. The rebels' supply of provisions is refused further supplies, or our prisoners at Richmond, giving as a reason for the refusal the unwarranted statements of certain Northern journals to the effect that the supplies were appropriated by the Confederates. Letters from our prisoners have already shown how groundless such accusations were, and it is to be hoped cleared up. With regard to the bad condition of the prisoners returned to Annapolis, it is asserted that they were extremely cases of consumption, and the rebel agent thought it a grave error on the part of the authorities to have allowed them to return.
