Who shall He?

The question, who shall be the next President of the United States, begins to press on all minds. It is, in fact, the grand question of the winter. Military movements, and political movements, will occupy the attention of the people. Congress will be at work on legislation, and the country will work at the great privilege and the duty of the citizen, the discussion of public measures, and the determination of the future public policy.

If a traveler, upon his return from a foreign country, were to tell us that it was the habit of the people he had visited to hold their prisoners, to manacle them, and to keep them in a state of wretchedness, we should be apt to regard them as of a low type of civilization. Consideration of the distinguishing characteristics of a Christian and civilized community, if further, were told that not only were the inmates of the prisons underfed, but that they were brutalized, that young boys were beaten with hogs' cart whips, and young girls were punished by blows about the neck and face, and that the most common punishment for a crime was to be put in a cage with a dog, and to be kept there until he should die, we should be apt to regard them as of a low type of civilization.
