Fenian Brotherhood.

attended considering the short notice given. We give the following passages from Capt. Walsh's address. He explained the meaning of the word "Fenian." It was the name given by one of the Irish chiefs to an order of Knighthood, that flourished in Ireland previous to the christian i. Of these knights, modern historians have little to say. Their history must be sought for in the song of the bards and the chronicles of the early annalists; but distant and far away as it is in the twilight of antiquity, it shines through the waves of time brilliant with their virtues their courage, charity and fidelity. For more "Deaths pale fing is not yet advanced there"

For Ireland he said the triumph of liberty would not be the mere triumph of strength, of mind or manhood. It would not be that Irish Patriots were superior to English hirelings, that Irish pluck was better or tougher, than Saxon, dogedness. On: No. it would be more than all that, for when the struggle would have passed away—when chief and soldiers friend and foe, would have passed to another sphere—when the rival banners and arms would have mouldered and rush. Iron, as shown by the recital of the dimensions of some six new rolling mills created during the past year. As large an increase as these figures evidence in the supplying power of the Iron market of Pittsburgh, and as heavy as the total of the iron rolling mills show the producing pow-er of our city to be, yet there is no doubt that Pittsburgh is yet in its infancy as an iron marchief and soldiers friend and foe, would have passed to another spicer—when the rival banners and arms would have mouldered and rushed away, the triumph would still live—a poor scattered oppressed and sighted race would be collected prosperous, and respected. With her great resources and antiral advantages, ire land would soon rise to a proud and nonored place among the antions, and the triumph of liberty would be for her and her children for ever—the triumph of Peace prosperity and respect. After some few allusious to the Chicago fair, the speaker concluded amid the applause of a highly delighted audience.

Pittsburgh is yet in its infancy as an iron market.
