LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 10, 1864.

BRECH-LOADING CANON.

Next to the importance of Artillery, to meet the improvements in other arms of military service, there is no greater desideratum than that of an improved mode of loading, in which where now discussing perhaps, indeed for naval use it would not be the second place, as between breech loading and rifled ordnance, ease was a question of such importance, that European nations spent millions of treasure in the solution. Rifled cannon have been successfully introduced in Europe and in this country, after spending forty millions of dollars in the manufacture of them, the British nation are compelled to admit a failure in their armament, some hundreds or thousands of this expensive article of war.

Our own Ordnance Department, which is the largest factory in the world, is said that one half of the people in the world do not know how to load a rifle, and we may add, with equal truth, that not one half of our citizens know to what extent the breech-loading rifle is superior to the muzzle-loading rifle. We are now engaged in introducing a new rifle, which we call the "Mann's" rifle, and which we believe will be the most important improvement in the art of war since the invention of the breech-loading rifle. It is a breech-loading rifle, and it is a rifle of the most powerful description. It is a rifle of the most powerful description, and it is a rifle of the most powerful description.

Further remarks are designed to be introductory to a brief sketch of the principles of the "Mann's" rifle, and to a description of its construction. It is a breech-loading rifle, and it is a rifle of the most powerful description. It is a rifle of the most powerful description, and it is a rifle of the most powerful description.
