We should be sorry to do any act, or take any position, which would look as if we were the self-proffered champions of any class of wealthy corporations.

As an organ of the Democratic party, faithful to its cherished traditions, we regard such corporations with distrust. They not only wield the great power which naturally belongs to wealth, but, by their organization and connections, they are able to exert an influence on legislation which favors the tendency of legislation which favors the tendency of power to silently steal from the many to the few. Of course, nobody can dispute the great benefits which result to the country from its railroad afid bank. ing corporations; but it is equally indisputable that behind these advantages there lurk tendencies hostile to republi-
