Health. What a precious and inestimable gift is sound, uninterrupted health ! We call it a gift, because all the blessings man enjoys here are a grant from the beneficence of the Creator. And what a pleasure it is to be free from all ache and pain! The mind becomes infeebled, and he who possesses continued bodily health has also the additional advantage of enjoying a sound mind. The preservation of the constitution, physically as well as politically, is a matter of the first importance with all persons. But, alas, in both cases, it is only those who suffer the loss, that are fully able to appreciate the benefits of a good constitution

Though health is a gift, its preservation to a certain extent remains in our own hands: Proper sanitary regulations, especially in a city he at like this, conduce greatly to the promotion of good health. It is indeed astonishing that the general health of the city is as good as it is reported, when we consider the surroundings. The murky, fillthy and almost putrid water from the rivers, when swolen by heavy rains that come down in torrents from the steep hill-sides, sweep along the streets of cities and villages, a training ton, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Watter, and intelligence which he always brought to the performance of his duties.
b Colonel Symington's excellent qualities as an officer prooured for him the highest esteem of his porfessional comrades, whilst his antiable disposition and upright character gained their warm regard and affection as a friend. In all the places where he has been stationed, willing testimony to his profosical evolution of the resonance of his normal evolution of the state carrying along with it all the offal of alleys and sewers, is enough, of itself, to produce much sickness. Then the noxious gases of every cellar and ground room, that rise like miasmas, whenever a door or window is opened, are certainly not well calculated to promote health. The very paper upon many walls and the carpet upon many floors, treasure up the seeds of diseases and death/ unless dissufecting agents are freely used to counteract their influence. Particularly in the warm weather, from this time in the year till the first of November, lime and other disinfectants should be unsparingly used N. B. By way of addenda to the above dein every cellar and in every room, where a musty served tribute to an honorable and honored and offensive odor is observed to arise. It is officer, 1 may add that Col. SYMINGTON was in . into such places that the poison of disease in command at Allegheny Arsenal for six years, aidiously creeps and conceals itself, till its acwhere he will long be remembered by all under his command, for his efficiency, urbanity and cumulation produces contagion. Of course it is not our place, nor our desire to dictate to the gentlemanly deportment toward all with whom city authorities upon this or any other subject, but we would rather suggest directly to the people themselves, that the use of some thousands of bushels of lime, would not only make demanded a court of inquiry, which was accordthe cellars and vacant rooms of the city smell ed, and his vindication was complete.
