Vacant Places In glancing over the array of fine and beautitul pictures exhibited in the Artist's Hall at the Sanitary Fair, we are free to admit that the collection is a work of great labor, and that the committees are justly entitled to praise for the effort made in securing the excellent variety of brush and pencil touches there exhibited. Yet there seems to be something wanting in this rare collection to complete the representations. As it stands now it is like a beautiful family of blooming children, whose parents are dead and whose seats are vacant. We looked around in vain for a glimpse at the venerable fathers and ratic government. There was no Adams, no Jefferson, no Jackson, no Scott, no Webster, no Benton, no Clay, no Cass. Indeed it made an impression of sadness to witness those vacant places in this collection of portraits. Perhaps we would do injustice to the committee to call it neglect, and we will soften the impression and say that it is an oversight that is deeply to be regretted. It seems to place us in the attitude of ungrateful children. if not a rebellious offspring thus to forget the great benefactors of our race and nation, the elequent statesmen and peerless patriots that have guided the proud ship of state through the storms and billows of seventy years without ac Previously reported ... cident or harm to sail or rudder.. Are we to dis card the unionism of Jackson, the wisdom of Webster, the eloquence of Clay, the expérience of Benton, the matchless tactics of Scott and the unsulfied democracy of Jefferson! Have we already forgotten the obligations we are unter to the great and wise men who founded our government, shaped our Constitutions and enacted our most salutary laws! Are these patirely absorbed in the military genius and statesmanlike qualities of the young, as to entirely overlook the higher and nobler achievements of the old! Or have we, in the maze and turmoil of multitudinous labor, merely forgotten to give the portraits of our greatest sages a niche in this temple of fame ! Why even Greece and Rome have not yet forgotten their orators, sages, statesmen or poets, though thousands of years have clapsed and their proud cities and temples have been buried amid the ruins of centuries. With us but a very few years have passed, since many of the greatest statesmen that ever lived have mingled in the throng with us, enlivened us with their eloquence and enlightened us with their counsel, and already they appear to be forgotten. The halo of glory that encircled their brows is faded away in our remembrance, and the chaplets of honor that they wore are no longer recognized as hallowed relics of the olden time We do not wish to detract from the merits of the rising hero, or to set aught down in malice. They deserve the recognition they have received, but we ask in sincerity and candor, "What could have given greater eclat to a picture gallery than a lite-size portrait of the gallant, the brave and the dignified Brevet Lieutenaut (leneral Winfield Scott?" Where in all the earth is there a figure more noble, or a patriot more de- 1538MITHFIELD, AND 414 PENN Sta serving a place in a portrait glallery at a Sanitary Fair! A New Pathology—A new medical work, written and published in this city, by L. Oldshue, is contributing to medical literature as well as practical, and are glad to know that his labors in that line are receiving the law or notice of medical journals. The Eclectic Medical Journal, of Philadelphia, sneaks thus of the above work and its author: "We have received a copy of the work, and upon examination, must regard it as a volume highly to be recommended to every practitioner as well as student of medicine. Its great value consists in being based upon the natural laws of organization, and the deductions being made therefrom on scientific principles. So plainly are the general principles set forth, and scientifically the facts deducted, that no one car read it without great profit to himsell, and feeling desirous of testing their practical results. The author gives not only the optical appearances and chemical conditions of the urine in more than sixty different diseases, and the indications of treatment these present, but the work also contains an illustrative chart of urinary deposits, arranged in the most perfectly scientific order, being the most complete, systematic and convenient chart of the kind now in use, which represents the microscopte systematic and convenient chart of the kind now in use, which represents the microscopic appearance of over sixty different varieties of ingredients found in the urine. Upon the whole, it is the most valuable work of the kind that has ever been published, being peculiarly different from any other, and is worthy of a place in every medical library. Price $3,00. Kleber's Concert.—our readers will not forget that to morrow evening has been set spart for the grand Instrumental and Vocal Concert by Mr. and Mrs. Kleber of the most talented amateurs of the city, and supported by alefficient Orchestra. The choisest English ballads and operatic Solos and Choruses have been selected, and thoroughly rehearsed. We might mention here that this will be Mrs. Kleber's first appearance before the public. The few who have heard her speak enthusiastically of hertalents as a plaint. The concert takes place at Concert Hall, and as a great number of seats have already been taken up we advise all who desire a good seat to call without delay at Kleber's Music store, and secure seats.

Pittsburgh Cracker Market The market was steady, with a fair demand.

Philadelphia Boot and Shoe Market. The Shor and Leather Reporter says: The trade for the past week has partaken of the usual quietude existing intradegenerally. The nearby trade is somewhat active, and manufacturers are trade is somewhat active, and manufacturers are making up in anticipation of inture demand, and the prospect of a scarcity of workmen. Moderate sales have been made to western merchants, but they are not disposed to purchase in only ruch quantities as to meet the actual wants of their customers. None seem desirous of purchasing largely, by reason of the present unsettled condition of affairs. Prices are as per last report.

ast report. Boston Boot and Shoe Market. Boston Boot and Shoo Market.

The Reporter says: There is no change to record; the regular trade is very quiet, the only demand being for army boots and bootees, large orders having been loft during the past two or three weeks. Manufacturers who are not engaged on army work are getting up their regular goods for the fall sales, which should commence early to July. There is a fair stock on the market, a considerable portion of which was made up early, and rather a dangerous experiment in ordinary times. The shipments by rail and sea tor the week have been 6,133 cases.
