here, you old beggar boy! You've no right to be looking at our thowers,' shouted a little fellow from the garden where he was standing. The poor boy, who was pale, dirty and ragged, was leaning against the fence, admiring the splendid show of rooms and truling within. His Herbert! I'm sure his looking at the flowers don't hurt us.' And then to sooth the wounded feelings of the stranger, she added: Little boy, I'll pick you some flowers if you will wait a mo ment,' and she immediately gathered a boquet and handed it through the fence. Turn-SATURDAY EVENING. Interest paid at SIX ing to her husband she said: 'It does me good to see the people admiring the garden, and approaching him, she said, 'Are you fond of flowers, sir?' it will give me great pleasure to gather you some.' The young workman looked a moment in her face, and then said in a voice tremulous with feeling: Twelve years ago I stood here a ragged beggar boy, and you showed me the same kind-ness. The bright flowers and your pleasant words made a new boy of me aye, and they made a man of me too. Your face, madam, has been a light to me, in many dark hours of life, and now, thank God, though that boy is still an humble, hard working man, he is an honest and a grateful one. Tears stood in the eyes of the lady, as turning to her husband she said: God put it into my young heart to do that little act of kindness, and see what a great reward it has brought."
