It was in this mountain that the rebel Lieut-Gen. Polk was killed. He was killed instantiy by a piece of shell. We had been firing from the battery (Ennyk) just before this. Your son, Will Atvell, one of the gunners, still had a load in his gun. Capt. Matchil told into fire it when he gots a chance to see anything. We had been sitting around perhaps a quarter of gu hour when young atwill such a sual of me in the enemy s breastworks. He concluded to send the shell over anyhow, and it struck right in their breastworks. Alajor Reynolds saw the shot, and conjulimented young Atwell by telling thin that it was the best shot fired that day. He toll him to fre anyther, and to shoot a little higher, which was done. This shot exploded about ten feet from the ground, and was the one which killed the distinguisted rebel. Generals John-ston and Hardee are reported to have been with it did not kill all three of them. You have doubtless read the account of the death of theu. Polk in the papers, and it may now be a matter of interest to you to know that he was killed by your own son. The rebels left Pine Hill in the night time. The free use of fire-arms is ming quite common at social gatherings and indeed everywhere. If the civil law does not soon provide a remedy, the community will greatly suffer from the unrestrained liberty of fighting with dangerous weapons. Let the community at once oppose the use of fire-arms upon such occasions and the dangerous nuisance will be at once abated.
