That said and respectable paper, the New York Commercial Advertiser, cautions its contemporaries to observe moderation in their discussions during the present political contest.

The reader will remember that after General Pope was disastrously whipped by Lee and driven into Washington, the President and Secretary of War, feeling the necessity of the capital, implored McClellan to again take charge of the army from which they had dismissed him but a few days before.

Protest. That we resolve with profound affection intelligence of the recent victories achieved by the arms of the Federal States from their territories with those of the rebels, and that the doctrine of those who are hereby referred to as Major-General Lee, B. McClellan, and others, is a doctrine of military qualities which is of the most important nature.

At the time McClellan was the idol of both the army and the people; he had reached the point, but then began the prostration which has continued ever since. He was the man which it was necessary to becloud, less lights would be entirely obscured by his brightness. The work of detraction began and continued, until now the very man in Congress out of it, who willingly and publicly proclaimed that he had saved our country's capital from rebel devastation, have hesitations to express doubts as to his love and attachment in his country.

Small Favors. The Abolitionists are making a unusual favor over their triumph in Vermont; this is a triumph of the present nervous condition of that party, from the days of Jefferson until the present, never voted anything but an anti-Democratic ticket. Two years ago there were not five thousand Democrats in the State; now there are three or four times that number. So, it does them any good, we hope the Abolitionists may continue to congratulate themselves upon their victory in Vermont, from now until the Presidential election.

McClellan's Letter. The admirable letter of Gen. McClellan, accepting the Chicago nomination has fallen upon the Abolition papers like a bomb; some of them without reading it at all. It has taken them all week, and it will require several days before they recover sufficiently to resume their standard of the writer. In the meantime McClellan's platform is the platform of the Union as it is. The proposition of the Union as it is. The proposition of the Union as it is.

HOW THEY DID IT, OVER THE LEFT. The perusal of the following reply to a despatch of General McClellan's affords a striking contrast between the treatment he received at the hands of this party, and the very economical and judicious manner in which he was treated by the Union as a whole.
