Communication -A widow lady, whose hus-bad is in the field sends us a communication in which she complains of the way some members of our community express themselves when they say that they do not care how much the prices of clothing and provisions are enhanced as long as this warks continued. On this head as long as this warks continued. On this head as long as this warks continued. On this head as long as this warks continued. On this head as long as this warks continued. On this head as new dress or mains in themselves under their hmited ericumstances i Wonder if those who talk in this fashion would give itvo hundred dol-lars to a poor old woman who is not able to work for her living, aml whose husband has been suffring, during the past three years, all the hardships of war it. The old lady inveghs in strong terms against those who deprived her of her only protector, while she is deprived of all means of defending herself from the necessi-ties and trials which she necessarily must un-dergo in her present circumstances. She then directs her attention to the cause of all her pres-ent pitvations, and speaks with complacency of the good old day when everything was cheap and when she lived happily in the midst of plenty. But, says she, where the worked rule the people mourn, and she, of course, must bear her share of the general suffering. This communication is well - orthy of our at-tention, and shows this more oatsmittes are en-tailed on the people than we are inclined to think. The mea can bear all the difficulties of war whatever happend, as their pay must be in-creased according to circumstances, but the sol-dier's wite and widow, some of whom are too old to work, ised all the asperities of the times. Being a stranger in the city she inquired of two men who were at the depot if they knew where she could obtain ac-commodations for the night. They told her if she would accompany them to Allegheapy they could accoursing that they were honest in their intentions, she started with them. Upon arriving in Allegheny they attempted to com-mit an outrage upon her person, and during the souffle which ensued her little son received a severe blow in the forehead. The night police, seeing the souffle, hurried to the spot, when the assuants fied. They, however, succeded in arresting one of them, simed James Long, who was taken to the Mayor's offlee. Yeaterday he had a hearing before the Mayor and was fined twenty dollars, which he paid. The little boy, who was severely injured, is still at the May-or's offlee, his mother being without friends or means to procure him better accommedations.
