The perpetrator of the set was a young man named T. C. Loockerman, who for sometime past, has cheriched a main maingnant feeling toward Mr. Lr. arising from jealousy. The cause of Loockerman's enmity is thus detailed by the correspondent of the Sun: "As I Kingston and Cornelius Dodge. They juries received in a fight with Christopher learn, this young man (Loockerman) married come inst., in which John McCluskey, William of Major Jones, of this city, at whose house Mr. Ford, James Sullivan, James Sanford, Legrand was an oceasional visiter. Loockerman's conduct, however, subsequent to his marria oc, led to a separation, and the young wife continued to dwell under her father's roof, where Mr. Legrand. of course, continued his visits. Under the peculiar circumstances of the position of the parties. Mr. Legrand, as the friend of the family, grew in the eyes of Loockerman into a rival, and out of this the assault has occurred." At the time above specified, Loockerman posted himself at the door of the State House, armed with a bludgeon and a dirk, the latter concealed, and as Mr. Legrand approached, Loockerman ob-
