Beil Devotion in Low Life.

We take the following from an English ournal, and commend it to the attention of our readers as one of the noblest instances of heroism on record:

"A few weeks ago two miners, Verrain and Roberts, were at work, in South Caradon new shaft (which is intended to be sunk perpendicularly, through a granite country to intersect the lode at the depth of 140 fathoms.) 'The present depth is about 10 fathoms, and they had prepared hole for blasting, the fuse inserted, tamped up and all ready for firing. On these out casions the men are drawn up by a windmer: 10 of which are in meadow a good square log lass, and as there are only three in a copse, there is only one man at the brace, and he can only draw one up at a time; consequently, after the whole is ready one man is drawn up and the kibble lowered to receive the last man, who has to put fire to the fuse, and then both men at the windlass draw him up at the utmost speed. in order that all may get out of the way when the explosion takes place, which is sometimes so violent that large stones are thrown up at the top, carrying with them part of the roller and windlass to a considerable height. It unfortunately happened that as the safety fuse with which the hole was charged was longer than was necessary, they inconsiderately took a sharp stone to cut a peice of it off, and ignition immediately commenced. They both flew to the kibble and cried out to the man at the top to 'wind up;' but des ! sites trying all his might, he could met dait them. At this awful moment (when the
