I think her execution is very uncommon. I am glad you approve it, Mr. Short I didn't say I approved it, Mrs. Long; I merely said it was uncommon, very much like the noise of two cats in the gutter.

O, you shocking man! Mr. S. you're no taste, no feeling. But I can hear very sensibly Mrs. Long. outting his finger in bis ears. You've no music in your soul, as Ham-et sava. That cursed noise has driven it all out. Indeed Zephyrina's voice is not in type o-night, but I think she sings and playe emarkably well fur one of her age; don't you, Mr. Short?

Umphil ay-for that matter, she is indeed too old to learn. Old! Mr. Short!

She looks ten years older than she really is. She has a very womanly look, furone of her age -don't you think she has Mr. Short?

Umph! think she has some resemblance a woman. She was as forward at fifteen, though I say it, as most girls at twenty-five.

I hate your fot ward chits. But you don't understand me, Mr. S.-I' near she was forward in womanly accomolishments, and in a womanly appearance. On, as to appearance, I could swear she ad been a woman these dozen years.

Dancing was now proposed, and as Mr. Short protested against shaking the foet, even though Zephyrina was ready to be his partner, Mrs. Long still entertained him with the accomplishments of her

Don't you admire Zephy inu's dancing! I can't say that I am a judge of these small matter, Mrs. Long.

You're too modest, Mr. Short. lt's a rare fault, Mrs. Long. Observe with what grace she movest really think she dances remarkably, for me of her age, don't you think so, Mr.

Umph! I think she dances much befter han the elephant. In fact the elephant is a clumsy dancer. Fie, fie on you! Mr. Short, to compare my daughter, Zephyrina, to a four-legged beastess. Why, that's not her fault, ma'am. Whose fault!
