The seeming anomaly in Nature that stays for a shortune, the crippling hand of winter, is not alone peculiar to our own country, but is common in some parts of Europe and Asia. Turning from any further description of his short, but beautiful interruption in the approach of winter, with the appearances of which all are more or less acquainted, we would draw attention to the causes which He is also prepared at all times so furnish Sight Drafts are thought to be instrumental in producing

it. There have, however, been no satisfaccry reasons advanced to account for it, nor are there likely to be any, until there are further advances made in Natural Science. The most plausible hypothesis, that we recollect meeting with, is about to the following offect.

It is generally known, that in the high GREAT SALE OF FENNSYLVANIA LANDS, &c., Northern latitudes winter commences in BY AUCTION.—Will be sold by Public Auction, the month of September, and that the pro-Northern latitudes winter commences in cess of congealation proceeds with great e fourth day of October next, commencing at nine of alacrity. It is also known that water when passing into the form of ice, gives out a large quantity of its latent heat. It is not 140,000 Acres of good and well watered Farming and unreasonable then to suppose that when so large, a quantity of ice is formed, that there nevivania—on parts of which there is abundance of must be also a large quantity of heat thrown into the atmosphere. It is this that heated air always rises, when colder and hevier air rushes in to fill up the vacuum. It is therefore thought, that heat arising from the formation of northern ice, would rise Y Morrison & Co. London, for sale only by S. is this. The direct action of the sun's rays upon the surface of the earth, during the summer months must have the tendes cy to heat it, to the depth of two or three feet. The surface once heated must transmit that heat to the strata immediately be low it, and the heat during summer must have been accumulating in the cardistimerest. He hopes to extend the lement of this branch This process of accumulating heat in the earth must have been going on until the last of August, after which there may be short season in which the earth and the air are of equal temperature, but finally the atmosphere becoming colder than the earth, the natural consequence is that hear will ascend into it. This must have powerful tendency in producing the cleantion of temperature in the air at the present
