Doctors

Now that I am talking of doctors, what strange set they are, and what a singular position they hold in society! Admitted to the fullest confidence of the world, yet; by a strange perversion, while they are the des positories of secrets that hold together the whole fabric of society, their influence is neither fully recognised, nor their powers acknowledged. The doctor is now when the monk was once, with his additional added vantage: that, from the nature of his stadies, and the research of his art, he reads more deeply in the human heart, and penstration into its inmost recesses. For him life him little romance. The grosser agency of the body, reacting ever on the operations of the mind, destroys many a poetic daydream, and many a high-wrought illusion. him alone does a man speak "son dernier" mot;" while to the lawyer the leanings of self-respect will make him always impart and favorable view of his case. To the physical sician he will be cardid. Yet these are the men who, watching the secret workings of human passion, can trace the progress of mankind in virtue and in vice. While ministering to the body, they are exploring the mind; and yet, scarcely is the hour of dans ger past, scarcely the shadow of fear diesipated, when they fall back to their hum. ble position in life, bearing with them but liule gratitude, and, strange to say, so learle The world expects them to be learned; well-bred, kind, considerate, and attendives. patient to their querolousness, and enduring
