STEAM ENGINE DEFENCES AT SEA .- A highly interesting experiment was tried on board the $oldsymbol{E}_{x}$ cellent gunner-ship at Ports nouth a few days ago, to test the efficacy of the defences of the boilers in attent ships of war. One of the difficulties to our mount, in order to render the steam navy of greater efficiency in action, is to afford adequate protection to the boilers against the shot of the enemy, as a ball perforating them would at once place. No ressel hers de combat. With the view of affirding this protection to their boilers, severat war steamers have been fitted up with extra defences at the parts where the boilers are fixed .-These defences consist of fifteen plates of layers of metal each three eighths of an inch thick The hiert of the experiment on board the Ercellen was to accertain what resistance these defences o boilers would offer to a cannonade at point blank distance, which is 400 yards. An iron target was prepared, made exactly of the material which constitutes the protection of the boilers of a steamer. and placed at the distance of about 400 yards from the ship, from which guns of different calibre were fired at it. Admirals Sir E. Codeington and Parker, and a great number of naval officers, inoluding those from the Austrian frigate, were present to witness the experiment. The first shot that was fired was an 8 inch hollow shot, and was projected from a 68 pounder medium gun. struck the bull's eye, or centre of the target, and, ches, rebounded therefrom, and was split into eeveral pieces by the concussion. The second sho was a solid 32 pounder, and was fired from a gun of nine feet six inches; it struck the edge of the target, glanced off, and was split in two pieces. The third shot hit the contro of the target, where it longed, having renefrated several plates. The fourth shot struck the third, and sent it clean through all parts of the iron, splitting it into mumberless pieces, which were found on the off-aids of the wooden stage on which the target was fixed. The fifth and sixth went through the perforation made by the third and fourth. About ten other shots were fired, all striking the target in various parts, and completely destroying it. The result of this experiment has shown how totally inadequate are the present defences of the boilers war steamers to protect them from the assaults of the arremy where a precision of fire shall be at-It has also shown, what is much more the gamery practice has been brought to by those stanying it on board the Excellent, thus practicalbliged to undergo a strict examination is gunnery before they can pass for lieu enants. The exact result in this state cannot be told until the meeting of the Legislature. As matters now stand it is believed that the Democrats have carried the Senate by who had lost his way, and asked of them six, and the House of Representatives by from two to five majority.
