To ADELINE - Written on the fly leaf of her Eng: lish Reader

Dark-eved one. ' I fundly adore thee: Thou reignest supreme in my soul; And tell me, dear girl, I implore thee, The cause of this mystic control:

Though around thee, is no less a mystery to thee

How precious to me was thy story In that walk through the twinkling grove; How full of delight and of glory, sed.

I'i the light of that dark eye has perith'd, And that figure of beauty declined, While love's recollections are cherished, And love but expires with the u ind. That love 'twixt our hearts shall live on and in-

MEM .- Baltimore, Md, May 11, 1842. The long forgotten subject of the lines just given is now the wife of a tailor, and has four children! Dined with the family today; and the first injunction imposed by my first love, was to kiss the baby! (an emire stranger to me,) after the mother had wiped its nose (it had a shocking bad cold in its head, poor thing) with her apron: Book of martyrs! what a li e! Four childred already! Where's Malthus, (the old villain,) that the world is thus filling up!-Farmers, ahoy! Is the fly in your wheat! is your corn land ploughed and furrowed for planting! If so, procure the Baden; which produces six ears to the stack-fo the land is swarming with children.

SECOND LOVE. Lines to Margaret. Come near, my beautiful, thy hand-Far well-forever I depart. I've nought to a k, nor to command; Nor give thy trusting heart.

Nay, weep not that I leave, 'tis valid. But check at once these girlish fears; Crown'd with success I'll come again, To chide thee for these tears. Why this despair upon thy facel Why tremblest thou in this e abrace?

The blush forsook her cheek -her gaze, Was tuen'd to heaven, sublimely mild-So pure, 'twas like the estatic praise Of the lone orphan child; When cherubs, from the fields of light Come and commune with her so lone; Aud tell her of a land more bright, And claim her as their own.

Her arms relax'd, and still her breath-Are love and hope allied to death! Feetly her heart its tone resumed; Faintly the warm light of her eyes Dimly the blu h her cheek re-'lumed; Like morn o'er the wintry skies; Sofily slie warbled, yet so low. We know not what her words might be;

And gushingly her eyes o'erflow, Vor now she weeps with me: And with them pass her pang of grief,

"Farewell! And thou wilt come again, Though love and beauty intervene And years of trial and of pain; Nor blot this hallowed scene From out thy memory, till yet Thou com'st the lover and beloved: A man's fidelity is met,

And woman's truth approved." We parted-with that bissful pain Of lovers when they ren i the chain .- 1834. Extract of a letter to friend Jack, dated Woodville. Mo August 7th, 1842,- Tell poor Bob that we have a very comfortable cabin, and that we shall raise this year
