'Is that all?' asked the Count, with rather a sneer at the poverty of my sport; is that all you can do? Why, my friend, if you like that kind of shooting, I can at once gratify you. I will show you a mode by which you may kill ten or a dozen larger than that any morning you choose; that is, if you think it worth the trouble. 'The trouble! I'd travel a hundred miles to enjoy such sport." 'Well, then, what say you to to-morrow?' 'With all my heart,' replied I, and I reired to my room to prepare for the treat which awaited me. The earth was covered with deep snow, and the weather was remarkably cold,-At daybreak I was aroused and invited to QUEEN of the SOUTH enter a sledge, drawn by four horses, and in which I found the Count already ensconced, warmly wrapped in furs. As we were starting, the servant threw in under our feet a young sucking pig, which began squealing out in such a manner, that could scarcely bear its shrill cries.

'Good gracious, sir!' I demanded .-What is that noisy brute placed here

'You'll see bye and bye. Sit quiet, and I'll fulfil my promise. ·Ah! it's for our breakfast, I suppose.-Surely if this be the case, you had better have it killed before starting."

Be quiet, we have ample provisions without eating this little animal; and my friend again relapsed into smoking silence, drawing on his ample meershaum for present enjoyment.

The horses now plunged into the forest t full gallop. The little pig tired of squealing become mute. I confess the vhole affair puzzled me. When we had traveled about three eagues, the Count suddenly addressed ·Whose ear?

'The pig's.' I did so, and the little thing began crys The superiority of these Bedsteads, consist in the fast ing out in the most piercing and piteous The superiority of these Bedsteads, consist in the first enings, which for durability and ease in putting up and taking down.
