

PITTSBURGH MARKET.
Reported for the "Post," by Isaac Harris.
FRIDAY MORNING, September 1, 1843.

Business seems to revive, and our wares present a more lively appearance than of late. The receding season begins with dyes, caris and stockings, and a large quantity of goods coming in for the opening by almost all our wholesale and retail stores and commission warehouses. The stocks of hand and daily requisites will soon make the vendors anxious to get their wares into the hands of the manufacturing departments soon buy and sell in large quantities.

We look daily for a rain and fine rise in the market, and a few sales of the day have been made. The money much more plentiful in the hands of our people—for it is very plenty and abundant in our hands and with capitalists, investing investments in the market and ordinary business.

Flaxseed—has fallen a shade. Sales from boats and warehouses $3.75-$3.57½, and $4 for very choice brands; and for stores $3.45, 35 for barrels. Flour—$3.75, 40, 40, 17½ for barrels.

48—$6 a ton for new. Flaxseed 75½¢.
all kinds of staves. Clover $3.50 a bushel.

PHILADELPHIA MONEY MARKET.—Bicknell's Reporter, of the 29th, gives a favorable statement of the business of Philadelphia. It says:—"Every thing is going on in our world of trade wears a cheerful aspect. Although we look for nothing extravagant or speculative to a culpable degree, we state with pleasure, that our merchants hold a most encouraging stock of a great variety of a renewed and confident opinion. True, the business of the city is to be met with occasionally, here and there, complaint and grumble, but in our remarks we adhere to the business world in a general sense. The outlook of the times are generally favorable. The gloom and inactivity which have so long characterized our commercial circles have disappeared, and the full trade which has been so long wanting, is again being revived. It is not so much that there seems to be rising into activity and prosperity. The supply of money in New York continues quite as abundant as ever. The Express says: 'There is now a very active business doing by our dry goods, hardware and grocery merchants. Our city is

WESTERN FLOUR.—The following fact speaks for itself. It is taken from the Baltimore Sun. "About the present season the flour is the best. Western Flour has been sold in the Baltimore market in any quantity, by the agents of the Pennsylvania Canals. The price paid for its transportation from Pittsburgh to this city was 10 to 15 cents per barrel. The parcel's received here have turned out to be of very fine quality, and have been very generally approved."

It is very easy to recognize such indication as the above of the future productiveness of our public works. The business on our Canals and Railroads is yearly increasing, and the transportation of Western Flour to the Baltimore market, must, in a very short time, become a source of immense revenue to the Commonwealth. Nothing but the most rigid economy and the most judicious legislation can save the public treasury, and the people, from the ruin of such a vast and successful enterprise.

The following is relative to the prospects of the Planter, is Louisiana, and other cotton growing States, is taken from the New Orleans Bee of the 17th inst.:

"The late change of weather must have operated, very beneficially upon the crops both of sugar and cotton, and will also have a similar effect upon the staple, and, in some degree, upon the other crops. Yet, as the saying is, we are far from being out of the wood, owing to the unusual drought and soil that have prevailed. It will, therefore, be some time before we are likely to overtake them as a heavy producer, such as heavy rain, which would retard the picking, and an early frost, which would put the cotton out of the ground."

From the interior, our accounts continue to represent the great improbability of an average crop of cotton, and the probability of a very small one. We shall approach within half a million of barrels of the extraordinary yield of last season. We have not received any reports from the interior, and we are not likely to be beginning to arrive in quantities. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, we see no reason to

The sugar crop will not amount to an average. The sugar cane looks well, but the late opening of the spring prevented the frost from stopping that maturing season. The sugar cane will be retarded full a fortnight, if not three weeks, thus exposing the crop to an early frost, which would go far to ruin the present prospect of a fair yield. But it is very generally conceded that the crop will fall short of this year's, which has reached the 125,000 bushels.
