

...the said that an entertainment is to be given at the Grand Gallery at Versailles which will exceed in the influence anything of the kind yet seen. This festival is to be held at night. It will require not less than 55,000 wax candles to light the galleries of the palace. The extent of the Museum is one league, or two and a half British miles. A regiment of infantry will remain under arms that night at the Palace. It is intended that the Queen of England should be gratified with a grand military review. Immediately after the arrival of the queen, orders were given to the General commanding at Paris to arrange the troops to hold themselves in readiness. This review will take place in the Couronne, and in the Court of the Tuilleries. Troops are to line the road through which the Queen is to pass from Louvre to Paris. Her entrance into the capital will be announced by a discharge of 101 guns.

On Friday 30 of the secret police left Paris in post carriages for London. The House of Commons was opened at a quarter of twelve o'clock, and immediately a considerable number of notices were admitted, and occupied the benches usually appropriated to the Peers. Several notices were referred for perusal, which came rather late. Long before two o'clock the strangers' gallery, the two small side galleries, intended for Peers, and the body of the House, were completely filled, and chiefly with ladies. The Foreign Ministers, and the places appropriated to the Foreign Ministers, on the left hand of the throne, was also filled before two o'clock. We noticed the presence of the Prussian Ambassador, the Belgian Charge d'Affaires, the American Minister (Mr. Everett), and we believe the whole corps diplomatique were present. There were about, we would judge, not less than 1,000 persons who had been provided had more arrived. Her Majesty then read the following speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen. The state of public business enables me to close this prorogued session, and to release you from further attendance at your parliamentary duties. I thank you for the measures you have adopted for enabling me to give full effect to the several treaties which have concluded with foreign powers. I have given my cordial assent to the bill which you presented to me for increasing the means of spiritual instruction in popular schools, and for the better regulation of the revenue of the church available for the endowment of additional ministers. I confidently trust that the wise and independent intentions of the legislature will be aided by the zeal and liberality of my subjects, and that better provisions will thus be made for public worship and for pastoral superintendence in many districts of the country. I view with satisfaction the passing of the act for removing doubts respecting the jurisdiction of the Church of Scotland in the administration of ministers, and for securing to the people and the courts of the church the full exercise of their respective rights. It is my earnest hope that this measure will tend to ensure religious peace in Scotland, and to avert the dangers which have threatened a sacred institution of the utmost importance to the happiness and welfare of that part of my dominions. I continue to receive from all foreign powers assurances of their friendly disposition, and of their earnest desire for maintenance of peace.

My Lords and Gentlemen. In some districts of the public business has been increased by the various combinations and disturbances unconnected with political causes. I have adopted the measures which I deem most expedient for the suppression of such disturbances, and the detection and punishment of the offenders. I have at the same time directed an inquiry to be made into the circumstances which led to the disturbance and violence in a part of the country usually distinguished for good order and lively obedience to the laws. I have observed with the deepest concern, the persevering efforts which are made to stir up dissension and to excite among my subjects in Ireland, and to excite them to demand a repeal of the legislative union. It has been and ever will be my earnest desire to administer the government of the country in a spirit of justice and impartiality, and to cooperate with Parliament in enforcing laws which are necessary to the peace and good order of the country, and to improve the social condition and to develop the natural resources of Ireland. From a deep conviction that the legislative union is not less essential to the attainment of these objects than to the strength and stability of the empire, it is my firm determination, with your support, and under the blessing of Divine Providence, to maintain inviolate that great bond of connection between the two countries. I have foreborne from requiring additional powers for the concentration of despotism to the concord and welfare of my dominions, as well as from desiring to restrict the powers of the legislature, and to diminish the efficacy of the ordinary laws, from my reliance on the good sense and patriotism of my people, and on the solemn declaration of Parliament in support of the legislative union. I feel assured that those of my faithful subjects who have influence and authority in Ireland, will discountenance any attempt to disturb the industry and retard the improvement of that country, and different classes of mutual distrust and animosity between different classes of people.

A NEW FASHIONED FAN. Some years ago, in Natchez, Miss., Prof. Maffei was announced to preach the next day. The name of the gifted orator had preceded him, and every person in the city of Natchez was anxious to hear him. Somehow the messenger failed to reach the house of an old woman, who, perhaps, had not heard a sermon for a quarter of a century, and very seldom went out into the world. She being excessively warm weather at the time, and having no fan, she started to purchase one. She went to a store where they happened to have a few fans, and she bought one. She returned home, and she found that she had purchased a fan of a new and very beautiful article. She was very much pleased with it, and she showed it to her friends. They all admired it, and she was very much pleased with it. She was very much pleased with it, and she showed it to her friends. They all admired it, and she was very much pleased with it. A DASHING ACT OF HEROISM.—The Baltimore Sun states.—According to the American, the anonymous candidate for Sheriff, rides two horses, with the hope of overhauling the Doctor who is not sufficient to accomplish his purpose, and if he does not get thrown before the end of the race, he will find himself at a considerable distance from the winning post. There is one little item of consolation however, and that is, the anonymous candidate, whether he rides one or two horses, and that is that he will, like the Irishman's horse, O'Boheran, most certainly like all the others before him.

A PROFOUND MYSTERY.—The New York Sun says.—We met, the other day, a man, some thirty years of age, well dressed, good looking, a sort of dandy even, who has known for some time to perform one of those labor we never knew him to have any money in his pocket, and he is a gambler, is above any suspicion of shift, yet lives, but how he lives, is a mystery. He has a habit of going to a well-known saloon, and he is a gambler, is above any suspicion of shift, yet lives, but how he lives, is a mystery. ALLEGHENY HARBOR.—We have seen it stated in some of the city papers, that the Council of Allegheny had authorized the construction of a steam boat harbor, at an expense of $50,000, and that the job had already been contracted for. We are informed that this is a mistake, and that no such plan has been adopted. It is a mistake, and that no such plan has been adopted. It is a mistake, and that no such plan has been adopted. COMMUNICATIONS. BY THE "ASTOR" OF YESTERDAY, I find the friends of the "Astron" of yesterday, I find the friends of the "Astron" of yesterday, I find the friends of the "Astron" of yesterday, I find the friends of the "Astron" of yesterday, I find the friends of the "Astron" of yesterday.

THE THEATRE.—Messrs. Editors.—I have often wondered why the theatre of this country enjoy so very little of public patronage, and why the "elite" of society is so very seldom seen in the temple of "Drama; and it has occurred to me that the strong religious sentiment of the population, the very high sense for decency and morals, and lastly but not least, the very imperfect state of the Stage, might occasion this indifference. I cannot entirely agree with the opinion of the "Astron" of this country, and shall endeavor to prove, that the stage can be made the representative of morals and morality, as well as any other place, and that it is more liberal patronage is required to induce Managers to put pieces on their bills that are instructive and moral, while on the other side, as long as the play is a mere amusement, it will produce more pieces of spectacle and lunge.

THE CONFESSORIAL.—In a town some fifty miles from Boston the members of a religious society were the habit of holding conference meetings in the church, in which they made a kind of confession, technically called "renewing their souls." A very pious member of the church, Mr. D., was in the habit of inviting his neighbor L., who was not a member, to attend these meetings; and one day which Mr. D. got up and stated the confession that he was a great sinner—that he had sinned with his eyes open, that he willingly and knowingly sinned, and that he was a great sinner—that he had sinned with his eyes open, that he willingly and knowingly sinned, and that he was a great sinner.

HAMILTON'S NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.—We do not know when we have derived more satisfaction from the inspection of any work of art, than from the examination we have been permitted to make of the practical working of this truly ingenious and valuable machine. In view of the perfection of its adaptation to what is intended for, as well as of the extreme importance and value of that grandiose invention, we would be glad to see any work of modern invention more worthy of admiration. Its design is to cut out the largest ship timbers, and give them the shape of a vessel, and levelled, all in one single operation. It is designed to be used in any single operation. It is designed to be used in any single operation.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT INVENTION.—It would seem almost impossible to set bounds to the inventive genius of our countrymen. Mr. William Duff, Civil Engineer, of Baltimore, has discovered an important process of preventing the explosion of steam boilers, with which he has made satisfactory experiments in the presence of competent judges, who expressed their belief in its efficacy. It is called the Hydrostatic Weighted Steam Valve. The invention consists in causing a portion of the water from the boiler to constitute a portion of the weight that is to be upon the safety valve's steam engine. To effect this, the weight is to be so made as to admit water to pass into it from the boiler, there being a hollow tube or stem attached to each weight, and forming a channel of communication between the hollow body of said weight and the boiler. In a work constructed and arranged according to this plan, the greater portion of the load upon the safety valve may be constituted due to the weight itself, which may be increased to the desired extent by means of the water in the boiler in the manner above stated. What the water in the boiler in the manner above stated. What the water in the boiler in the manner above stated.

TEMPERATURE AT NANTUCKET.—The Hoveboom Democrat says "the Yankees will have to give up their idea of invading Nantucket. There was a meeting of the Nantucket Board of Health, on the 24th inst., at which it was decided to send a party of 5,000 men to Nantucket, to see if they could not get a footing there. The party was to consist of 5,000 men, and was to be sent in a fleet of 500 vessels. The party was to consist of 5,000 men, and was to be sent in a fleet of 500 vessels.

DENSITY OF BODIES AT VARIOUS DEPTHS.—Experiments have been made which show that air compressed into the fifth part of its volume has its elasticity increased in a fifty-fold proportion; and that it continuously contracts at that rate from its own incumbent weight, so that at the depth of thirty-four miles, the density of water which water itself would have at that depth is increased to the depth of nine and a half miles. In descending, therefore, towards the center of the earth, at (say) four thousand miles, the condensation of ordinary substances would be the utmost power of conception. Dr. Young (Matthew) says that even steel would be compressed into one-fourth of its original bulk at a depth of 10,000 miles; and iron would be compressed into one-fifth of its original bulk at the center of the earth. It is too true, that we are yet but imperfectly informed of the law of compression, and it overcomes solid bodies beyond a certain limit. If, therefore, we were to descend to the center of the earth, we should find that the whole earth would be compressed into a solid mass of one cubic foot—we have much to say to comprehend on this subject.

DEAT THIS WAY!—Yesterday morning an Irishman named Peter Kerber, in the employ of Mr. Gussow, being chartered and carried (in one load) 113 bushels of wheat. The wheat weighed 61 lbs. per bushel, making in all 7011 lbs.—Camdenland Gazette. We know under—we can't bear either the story or the Irishman.
