A TRACT consisting of one hundred and forty-six acres of timber land, situated immediately on the timber being beech and poplar. It is a well known fact that cordwood of this kind is always bought in preference to any other by steam boats. There is no point on the Ohio river where good wood will bring a better price. In addition to this, there is no part of the western rivers navigated by so many steamers—and hence the great demand for good cordwood. It is obvious that this land is more valuable on account of the timber, as the clearing of less than one half will more than they have afways brought a good price, and are much used for building purposes. The soil is remarkably rich—and when cleared of its valuable timber, will suit in every respect for all kinds of farming purposes.
