remarks were made in the House, on Mr. WILKINS, on a resolution for the the Western Rivers :had no wish to detain the House by general speech on the subject involved ness to merit a share of public patronage. To those in the resolution, but merely desired to submit one or gentlemen who have kindly patronised him he returns two points for the consideration of gentlemen before his sincere thanks, and can with confidence appeal they voted on the motion to reconsider. Interested and deeply interested, as the West was in the adoption of some proper measure on the subject of improving its means of navigation, he should have preferred that the gentlemen from Kentucky (Mr. Thompson,) had not hus prematurely sought to force the question on the House: he had rather that the friends of the measure should have waited for the regular time, when the proposition would come up fairly, and a motion could be brought for appropriating a specific sum for improving the navigation of the Mississippi and its tributary

He was glad he had done so, for that very fact seemed, in his view, satisfactorily to settle the question as to the right of Congress. to appropriate for the Ohio and Mississippi as public FASHIONBLE BOOT MAKER, has removed national highways. The boat referred to was an iron to No. 34 Market street, between Second and steamer of a thousand fons burden, built for the ser-Third streets, where he would be happy to see his vice of the government, and the mere fact was worth language which was too plain to be misunderstood that the waters of that river constituted the national highway. Steam vessels had already been built there for the revenue service, both on the lakes and en the gulf, but this was one for ocean service. Yes: and the Ohio river led us directly and as uninterruptedly (no, not at present as uninterruptedly) to the ocean as the way to the ocean was open from the port of New York This had been done under the sanction of the House, for had it not been. Congress could have arrested the work; and he repeated the position that this was sufficient to settle the question of national highway.

The mother of States, (as the gentleman from Virg ginia had termed his native State.) and Mr. W. would add, the mother of statesmen, had once been the owner of the Ohio river. By the act of cession, in Murch, ment reserving, however, to herself the jurisdiction other, would spend their money on a stream over which they had no control and no jurisdiction. They had no power to suspend or interrupt the navigation for moment by works to improve the river's bed; they | could not lay a stone, they might not so much as cast He would again return his thunks to his friends and the public for the unprecedented patronage bestowed upon his establishment, and believing that they have a little character of Landreth and Fulton, near Philadelphia. to be expended on improving the navigation, but within her own limits exclusively, the Legislature declaring, in the very act of appropriation, that she could not go any further. Afterwards, by indulgence of both the States of Ohio and Virginia, she did extend the application of that sum one hundred miles down the river, as far as Wheeling, but it was in removing driftned and things of that nature. Mr. W. would state a fact or two more. A larger ship, called the General Butler, (after the hero of this name, so well known in our military history.) had been y to discover where the port of Pittsburgh was, from which her papers stated her to have cleared. His Solomons of the custom-house resorted to their maps. and at length discovered that there was indeed a place in America called Pittsburgh, but it was nearly three thousand miles from the occan, and they wisely con-

statement of the honorable gentleman from New York, byer the way (Mr. BABNARD) as to the number of boats navigating the Ohio and Mississippi. Of the total number he confessed with shame his ignorance; Every attention will be paid to furnishing COFFINS, but he could state that there had within the year 1843 been constructed at Pittsburgh alone thirty-six steamboats, at a cost of $788.000, and of an aggirgate tonnage which he was afraid to state. All these had been built to be used on the great highway of exclusively, merchants or other persons wanting can be supplied by him with a better article than the foreign, and at lower prices. Intending to use only the best quality of File Steel, manufactured by the Messrs. kered the attention of gentlemen to the importance of SHOERBERGER'S, which is now brought to a perfection the subject now pressed upon them. The people of the Westasked not of the House to save them from the storms of heaven; these no human power could averti but to rescue them from those too often fatal dan-gere arising from huge floating trees, or trees partially embedded in the bottom of the river, but presenting the ends of their floating trunks directly in the path of the vessel, technically called "snags," and from their vibratory motion "sawyers," and from the rocks which in some places encumbers the channel itself. From this danger Congress could, in a great measure, rescue surs., where he will keep constantly on hand a good assortment of well mide FURNITURE, and hopes, by arm-chairs, reposing on soft cushions, and surrounded on every side by more of comfort and magnificence than any legislators in the world beside, to ongage in cold and icy debate about the subtleties of constituional powers, while such appalling dispeters, such soul-har-rowing scenes as that which had happened near St Louis were every day's occurrence. Was it not a sad reflection that the vessel which had plunged so many human beings into death had been destroyed by a single log of wood, which a snag boat could have cut off in a few seconds? He would add but one word, and this ha addressed to the strict constructionists who composed Mr I. is himself a member of it.] Mr. Winking, resuming said that the notion of those gentlemen and his own differed widely. He was for a liberal construction of the Constitution and for a liberal disbursement of the public money to foster the com merce and industry of the nation. For what else were gentlemen here? The country was in safety.

They had the great charter of its liberty; they had all its invaluable institutions. These were not to be provided. For what, then, did they sit as legislators?-A backwoodsman got from the Government his four variety of the most ashionable Hars and Cars, hundred acres of rough soil he had the patent for it n his trunk the charter of his rights were secure: the land was his. He went on to surround it with a fence, and there no stood and there stood his, little barkand there he stood and there stood me fittle oark covered cottage, the blac smoke curling from its low built chimner, in the midst of his own freehold. What next? Why, he then looked round him, and he saw GRINDING AND POLISHING—Sail Irons on every hand either the primeval forest of the logs on every hand either the primeval forest of the logs which his own toll had hewn.
