Evans' Chamomile Pills.

ABRAHAM J. CLEMER, residing at 66, Mott street, New York, was afflicted with Dyspepsia in its most aggravated form. The symptoms were violent headache, great debility, fever, costiveness, cough, heartburn, pain in the chest and stomach always after eating, impaired appetite, sensation of sinking at the stomach, furred tongue, nausea, with frequent vomitings, dizziness towards night and restlessness. These had continued upwards of a twelvemonth, when, on consulting Dr. Wm. Evans, 100 Chatham street, and submitting to his ever successful and agreeable mode of treatment, the patient was completely restored to health in the short space of one month, and grateful for the incalculable benefit derived, gladly came forward and volunteered the above statement. For sale, wholesale and retail, by R. E. SELLERS, Agent.

Look at This.

THE attention of those who have been somewhat sceptical in reference to the numerous certificates published in favor of Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry, on account of the persons being unknown in this Section of the State, is respectfully directed to the following certificate, the writer of which has been a citizen of this borough for several years, and is known as a gentleman of integrity and responsibility.

To the Agent, Mr. J. KIRBY.

I have used Dr. Swayne's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry for a Cough, with which I have been severely afflicted for about four months, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is the most effective medicine that I have been able to procure. It composes all uneasiness, and agrees well with my diet,—and maintains a regular good appetite. I can sincerely recommend it to all others similarly afflicted. J. MINNICK, Borough of Chambersburgh.

FOR Coughs! Colds!! Consumption!!
THORN'S PULMONARY CANDY.
THIS pleasant and certain cure for coughs and colds goes ahead of all the preparations now or ever offered to the public. The use of it is so great that the proprietor has some difficulty in keeping a supply for the increasing demand. Medical agencies, groceries, druggists, coffee houses, and even bars on steamboats, keep a supply on hand. It is called for every where, and will sell in any place. The reason is this: every one who has a cough or cold by eating a few sticks find themselves cured, as it were, by magic. Persons at a distance, by remitting the money, post paid, to the subscriber, will be attended to. For sale by the single stick, 6¼ cents; five sticks for 25 cents; and at wholesale by WM. THORN, Druggist, 53, Market street, where a general assortment of Drugs and Medicines may always be found. j24.

A TOUCHING STORY.

It was but a few days after the painful discovery of the true state of her feelings, that Gaity, pale and dejected, stole out alone into the forest. She had not gone far when, through an opening in the trees, she perceived Onowahoo approaching. His step was heavy, his eyes downcast, and his whole manner plainly denoted the wretchedness of his mind. He advanced slowly to within a few paces of Gaity, when suddenly raising his head, he saw the object of his thoughts standing before him. He would have turned, but Gaity advanced a step to meet him, and, in a voice of kindness, said:

'Why is the countenance of my brother so sad?'

Onowahoo for a moment gazed mournfully upon her, then, pointing upward, he replied:

'As yonder cloud, now floating in the heavens, will soon fade and vanish away, so must Onowahoo depart from the presence of the Sloe-blossom.'

In a low, trembling voice, Gaity answered:

'I would Onowahoo leave the Sloe-blossom to droop alone in the forest! Where would her brother go that Gaity might not follow?'

A gleam of delight sparkled for an instant from the eyes of the Indian; he then rejoined:

'Onowahoo goes beyond the homes of the pale face, that when his great Father calls him, he may go to the hunting-grounds with his red brothers.'

'What bird has sung in the ears of Onowahoo? Is the hand of my father closed? Has the tongue of my mother spoken false, or the Sloe-blossom turned away from her brother, that he leaves her?'

Onowahoo shaded his eyes with his hand, and answered, with a low and mournful tone:

'Onowahoo must no longer look upon the Sloe-blossom.'

In a moment Gaity now comprehended the motives of the Indian. She made no reply, while Onowahoo turned sadly to leave her; then with a quiet dignity, foreign to her usual manner, and determination spoken in every feature, Gaity held out her hand, saying, in a voice of firmness:

'No, Onowahoo must not go alone! See, the Sloe-blossom puts her hand in his!'

The happiness of these unfortunate lovers was a dream too sweet to last; and that bitter, indeed, were the scenes to which they finally awoke.

Edith saw with grief her worst fears realised. Vainly did she warn her sister against the wrath of her fathers, should they discover her attachment for Onowahoo. Him she urged to fly immediately from the Grove, to leave Gaity for ever, and thus save her from the terrible indignation which she knew would await her; but, notwithstanding all her cautions, all her entreaties, the lovers wilfully shut their eyes to the danger they were hourly incurring, and, in one unguarded moment, all was discovered.

Gaity attempted no concealment of her feelings, but, with firmness and decision, at once openly acknowledged her love for the Indian.

No words can paint the wrath of Mr Trevor, as he listened to this avowal. It seemed as if that deep affection which had ever been, as it were, the well-spring of his existence, was at once suddenly and for ever dried up, chocked, obliterated! The wretched mother and Edith wept in agony, while Walter and Basil, with fury flashing from their eyes, deeply reviled and insulted their sister, who, with cheeks flushed with indignation, her form raised to its full height, stood proudly in the midst, making no reply to their insulting language, except by looks of the most perfect defiance. At length, seizing her by the arm, her father dragged her to her chamber, thrust her rudely within, and locked the door.

They went in search of Onowahoo.

"Dog! Indian! Slave! Away with you," cried Mr Trevor. "Away! If, at the setting of the sun, you are found within the limits of my land, your scalp, according to your own fashion, shall hang from the nearest tree!"

Onowahoo was about to reply, when Basil suddenly approached, and, raising his arm, gave the Indian a blow across the face. The next instant he was prostrated on the ground, the knee of the savage on his breast, and the knife already gleaming before his eyes. Mr Trevor and Walter rushed upon Onowahoo who, shaking them off with Herculean strength, threw down the knife, and stood, with flashing eyes and dilated nostrils, confronting his foes.

"The knife of Onowahoo will not drink the blood of a coward," he said; then, turning to Mr Trevor, he continued:

'Chief, you were the friend of Monntahqua—you have been the friend of Onowahoo—it is written on his heart! There is now a cloud on the face of the chief; but his words are laws to Onowahoo. His shadow shall not be on the land at the setting of the sun.'

So saying, he walked slowly away, and soon disappeared in the depths of the forest.

For weeks the unhappy Gaity was kept a close prisoner in her chamber, no person was allowed to see her. Even the entreaties of her distressed mother or Edith could not move the stern father to relent.

While thus, for the first time, the harmony of this happy household was broken by the rough hand of discord, Edith received a pressing invitation from a young friend in Boston, that she would officiate as bridesmaid at her approaching nuptials. She would gladly have declined, but her parents both urged and insisted upon her going. Hoping the void created by her absence might induce her father to forgive her sister, she at last consented. Without being allowed to bid poor Gaity farewell, Edith departed, bearing a heart of sadness, to scenes where joy and happiness reigned.

Edith judged rightly. Mr Trevor did, indeed, miss the society of his daughters—the gentle, lovely Edith, and that other bright and joyous girl, whose presence had ever been to him as a morning star; and a few days after the departure of the former, the door of Gaity's chamber was unbarred, and she was led forth to freedom. But it was such freedom as rendered the walls of her prison a heaven in comparison!

The cold and chilling looks of her father fell like a blight upon her young heart, crushing the germ of duty, which would have led her to have flown at once to his arms, to implore his forgiveness. The countenance of her mother, it is true, flushed with joy, tears started to her eyes, and she would have folded the pale, heart-stricken girl to her maternal bosom, but a look from her husband "froze the warm current of her soul," and she remained passive. There were her brothers also to greet her—but how! not with looks of pity and forgiveness, but with

"Hard unkindness, altered eye,
That mocks the tear it forced to flow!"

and poor Gaity that night returned to her chamber, more miserable than when she had left it.

She threw open the window, and looked forth, with tearful eye, upon the scene now, like herself, so changed from the bright spring time of happiness—the year and the yellow leaf had already fallen upon her young heart. It was now November. The autumn leaves, whose brilliant variegation had draped the forest with such gorgeous magnificence, were now (fit epitome of the idle passions of mankind) whirling rapidly past her window, seem to mingle with the clods of the valley. The moon was shining—while, at a little distance, the river, glistening through the thick shrubbery on its banks, spangled the dark outline of the forest. Heedless of the chilly night-wind, which blew around her, Gaity remained for some time absorbed in mournful reverie, when she was suddenly aroused by a slight rustling beneath her window, and almost at the same moment, a arrow fell at her feet. Jealousy seized the face of the maiden, for well she knew whose hand it speed. She hastily raised it—affixed was the ring she had given to Onowahoo! She now leaned from the window and looked eagerly around, and soon discovered the form of her lover reclining against a tree a few pa-
