The Waily Morning Post.

THE DISCARDED. A TOUCHING STORY.

Who that has lost a near and dear friend by death ut has felt that indescribable sickness of heart, which rends the soul to agony, as they view those scenes occe hallowed by the presence of that loved form, whom now the dark portals of the tomb enclose! Scenes where the beloved once moved in health and gladness; the vacantchair by the fire-side, the scat left veid abound the family board, the closed book, the favored flower, the thousand nameless instocipations converted with these now lost and gone! Oh, does it not seem that the hand of death is already tearing our heart-strings; lossing our hold of this world, so glorious in its grandeur and beauty, but where, also! Deathand Sorrow stalk side by side plucking the choices treasures from our garnered affections, and ruthlessly outsing down the lovely flowers which adorn the garden of happiness.

Pity, then, poor Edith! She mourned as an affectionate child, the death of ber kind mother, whom on earth she should see an more—yet sainted, as she believed, in Heaven. But not for her did she weep those tears of bitterness; not for her was the silent grief gnawing at her heart; no, it was for that other, her only beloved sister, the discarded Gaity; cast out in her youth and loveliness, an alien forever from her father's house!

From neither her father nor her brothers could Edith learn anything concerning her; in vsin she implored them to tell her where the wretched girl might be; on her knees she begged to be allowed to go to her, but, with a frown and with words such as never here and here were the such as never here. fore had been used to this gentle girl, Mr. Trevor forbade her everagain to mention the name of her sister, or on pain of lasting displeasure, seck in know where she was.

Nothing daunted, however, from her purpose, Edish resolved she would find her sister or perish in the attempt. Feigning, therefore, perfect indifference as to the fate of Gnity. (contradicted by her pale cheek and sunkon eye,) she no longer, mentioned her name, but appeared to give all her attention to the many household duties which now devolved upon her.

She soon noticed that, on a certain day of every week, one of her brothers left the Groundand remained absent during the day; that no questions were ever of the mountains.

Having made arrangements in the eastern cities, he will be constantly receiving accessions to his already well selected and seasonable stocks. Give him a call, thon, if you wish to furnish yourself with choice articles.

This was the day she knew one of her brothers would be absent. Instead, therefore, of going to her friends, Assoon as Walter passed the cottage, Edith, disuised in a large cloak and bonnet, mounted behind the ld man, and started in pursuit; keeping, however, as far behind as was practicable. The same dresry road was passed over with which the reader is already acquainted. Walter fastened his horse as before, while Edith and her companion passing behind the shelter, of some large rocks, watched his proceedings, the oise of their horses' feet being happily drowned by the roaring of the surf.

Walter unmoored the boat, and put off in the direction of Fisher's Island. It was there, then, that the unfortunate girl was a prisoner. It was, however, impossible for them to proceed farther: they, it erefore turned with all speed. Happy that her plan had so far proved successful,.
