Evening Song. BY MRS. SOPHIA H OLIVER. Soft o'er the western skies Daylight is dying, On the young flowerst's eyes, Slumber is l.ing. And hark! sweet twilight's song, Whispers the gale along, And low the flowers among Zephyr is sighing.

Down in the blue sea-caves Music is pealing, Over the climing waves Mellowly stealing. And now the fire-fly bright, Spangles the robe of night, And with his lamp of light, Round us is wheeling.

From the blue dome above Starlight is glancing. Where in some huunted grove Wood nymphs are dancing, And lo! the crescent mou Glides through the skies of June, Chanting a mellow tune, Thrilling-entrancing.

Now the clear evening bell, Sweetly is ringing; Down in the rocky dell, Fountains are springing. And hark! the leaves are stirred Where the sweet mocking-bird, Through all night's hours is heard, Repturously singing.

When o'er my lowly tomb, Evening is stealing, All her sweet flowers of bloom-Silently scaling. May friends I love so well, Kneel by my grassy cell, While the sweet vesper bell, Softly is pealing.
