From the Irish Citizen. THE CONFINED PAUPER. BT TROMAS DURS ENGLISH. He sighs to be abroadin green and dowery fields-To taste the sweet, which summer. Gladly yields.

He piper for air and sky-And tosses on his straw-Bat we control his motions By the Law.

Wiy need we let him out? Peor devil! if he die, Who for his death would sorrow-Who would crv!

He has no friends-no site---No mother near and dear-His and will draw from others Nets.tear.

He once had a store of gold. And friends were around him then-For gold has power of winning Friends to man.

They called him honest man-And worthy of a name-And no one laid a tarnish On his fame.

This hand was ever free To aid the suffering pos And none in want were driven From his door.

But fortune frowned, and then He saw his friends depart-And felt the awful WINTER In his beart.

The winter which remains-Which never yields to spring: Which seizes on the spi Icy thing!

The winter of thought-To which the wos gives birth-A deep and lasting hatred Of the earth.

It was a wicked thing To nurse such bitter wrath, As that which calls its darkness On his path.

But now his punishment, Thank God! is made secure-We'll teach this wretched pauper To be poor.

For poverty's a erime Which should be checked-Unless you'd have our nation Lose respect.

OSEE HIMES. would respectfully inform his friends and the public in general, that he dyes Ladies' And so we lock him up Within the poor-house call-He'll soon be past complainingtresses, Habits and Mantels of every description, black; and warrants them not to smut, and to look equal to new will he well.
