THE THREE Bib Doors, at the present time, is to some people a much more interesting subject than the annexation of Texas. Every thing in the clothing line, from a suit of the most costly cloth to a shirt collar, can be had at the most reasonable prices .-The "Three Big Doors," with the "metal plate in the pavement" is decidedly popular.

A number of advertisements that are prowded out will appear tomorrow.

AN INDIAN MURDERED IN JAIL. We learn from the Miner's Express, of Dubuque, Iowa, that the two Winnebago Indians confined there to await their death for the murder of white men quarrelled on the 2d instant, when the stronger killed the weaker. As near as can be gathered from the imper-fect English of the tall Indian, it appears that the small one reproached him with having killed a Chenokomen (white man,) that the Great Council had decreed that he should die, and taunted him with being the cause of their mirfortune (alluding to the murders.) This so enraged his comrade, that he caught up a stick of wood and dealthim the fatal 'slows. The tell Indian throughout the investigation of the Coroner's Inquest preserved the most stoical indifference. Upon being questioned about the quarrel, he replied, "Whiskey—he-mo-ko-mon, me nepo!" pointing to the stick of wood, and exhibiting by his signs the manner in which he accomplished the dreadful deed, insinuating that his companion had alluded to the causes which placed them in confinement. The Express says: Surely this poor Indian has drained the pitter cup of despair to its very drogs, and all his evils can be ascribed to that demon, alcohol, or fire-water, which the civilized white man retails to his uncivilize
