It was evening, one of those beautiful autumn even-ings, when all nature is calm in repose; not a breath f wind agitated the trees, which were colored by the last rays of the setting sun. It was impossible not to fall into a sweet reverie in the presence of this beauti ful nature, which seemed to put to sleep all who drew life from her bosom, except man, who must remain awake to think. It was one of those moments when the heart is touched, when we become bitter, when we are roady to weep, though we feel no grief.

I raised my eyes; at the end of the little street I perceived Ursula. A lingering ray of the sun glittered on the window, and shone on the head of Ursula. Her ito flowers, were in her bosom. There was in Ursula's paleness, in her black dress, in the sad-colored flow

Is there not in the joy that one gives to another, an intense delight to one's self? To deote yourself to one who, but for you, had known only he tears of life, is not that preferable to the most brilliant destiny? To revive a soul which is dead, pernaps to give it life—is not that a beautiful dream ? I looked at him with anxiety, my eyes filled with a tears. "Yes," said he, "ask Ursula if she will marry Goods received stored and forwarded to any part of the country. Having a large and commodious Warehouse for storage, and other facilities for the prompt transaction of business, he confidently offers his services to the community.

In a cry of joy was my answer. I hurried to the dwelling of the poor girl. When I arrived there she was as usual suting silently working. Solirude, the absence of all noise, the lack of all interest, had really ces to the community. aralysed her soul. God has been good to her. She suffered no more. Others only could pity this immortality of an existence which had not had its portion of life and youth. She smiled on perceiving me. This was a great movement for her paralysed soul. I did not fear to give a great shock to this suffering organization, by giving it a sudden emotion of happiness; I wished to see if life was absent, or utterly extinguished. I seated myself on a chair before her, took her hands n mine, and fixing my eyes upon her, said: "Ursula, Maurice D'Erval has told me to ask you to be his wife." The poor girl was thunder-struck; in an instant the tears started from her eyes;her blood, so long retarded, was precipitated in its course, spread over her face a rosy tint, and covered it with the brightest color; her who was dead, "Arise and walk," so Love said to 'Up-

"His wife!" repeated she with ecstacy: "his wife!" and precipitating berself towards the arm-chair of her mother: "Mother: da you hear ?! said she, "he asks me to become his wife."
