The same paper of Friday, gives the following particulars.

"The storm of wind, rain and hail, which passed over the lower section of Southwork, on Wednesday afternoon, was much more disastrous in its effects, than any storm that has visited that section for many years. There is a singularity about the storm, which is worthy of a passing notice. The tornado seemed to have started at a given point, a short distance South-west of the city, and diverging to such an extent, that at any section, if it were possible to have drawn a base line, it would present nearly an equitaleral triangle. On the extreme edges of the whirlwind, the effects were disastrous, but fortunately mest of its fury was spent before reaching any considerable number of buildings. The northern edge took in a range, the Foundry Messrs. Tasker and Morris. prostrated several of its chimneys, and the Wharton Street Methodist Church, a fine looking building, elevated during the Summer of 1842. This building was damaged to the amount of between four and five thousand dollars. It appears that the D window in the gable end was open at the time, and the wind passing through the aperture raised the roof on both pitches, and broke about three mentarily in the air, at an elevation of some thirty feet, paired, and furnished with entire new boilers, a piece of roof that fell upon the little boy, mentioned in yesterday's Sun, whom it nearly killed. The roof being in some measure fastened to the gable end by the return cornice, caused the wall to fall inwards, which in its descript being in some hards.
