The question may be asked, what under such circumstances, would be the use you would make of the executive power, if entrusted to your hands? Would it be wicked to dofest; or to e try into effect the ascertained wishes of our people? My reply to such a supposition is, that I can conceive of no public questions, in respect to which it is more emissing proper that the opinions and wister of the people of the different States should be consulted, and being aspertained, treated with greater respect than those which relate either to the admission of a new member into the confederacy, or the acquisition of additional territor with a view to such a result and that, y application for annexation, under anti-circum-es, were the tw me, I would feel it and duty to stances, were filled to me, would feel it menduty to submit the san to Congressions, public expression of their opinion of their opinion of their opinion of their opinion of the state of the subsection which has being take place.
