a have occasionally been hred since 1 have been writing, but by whom or with what effect I do not know. The bells have all sounded the alarm; ruin stalks abroad in our streets. It is now 10 o'clock—there is fire in the city of Philadelphiai A blazing light shows me the spot even now—I see it! It rises higher and higher, and still more torrific; the flames of the Kremlin could not the 's Church all on fire! That noble pile devoted to destruction; weeping tears of sorrow I write it! Phil-is heed; I fleer their shouts uttered at the progress of the flames, now more effulgent than erer. The cupola is a mountain of fire! there it orshes with the noise of the flames, now more effulgent than erer.
