OR, THE CRIMINAL PASTOR.

At the period when our country was but poorly populated and but thinly settled in the interior of our now thriving and excellent state of Massachusetts, the following event took places and in view of its peculiar character, will ever continue to hold a remembrance in thriving and excellent state or reassactionsetts, to dowing event took placet and in view of its peculiar character, will ever continue to hold a remembrance in the minds of those who delight in rehearing the acions of our early settlers.

It was a dark, dismal day in the month of March. The heavens seem'd clad in the habiliments of woe.

No sun penetrated the thickness of the heavy clouds which hurg in appailing masses, apparently as if in-tended to impress a still deeper gloom than that which in awful solemness obtruded itself over the peaceful and sequestored village of B.———. Its inhabitants had been called upon to mourn the decease of their love ed pastor, a pious man who had lived many years of honor amongst them, and who by his good heart had won a place in their rustic affections which death old scarcely sever. ound to settle down amongst them.

In the meantime there arrived in the village a stranger. A young man who by his appearance (for it denoted sedateness and reserve,) would strike the beliolder with the idea of his being a suisister of the goapel. Scarcely had he come among those people lers he was chosen to fill the void, dearh had thus suddenles caused. No constitute of the content of the conten MERCHANT, Charles Howard had been born of noble parents in the western part of England. His father being an opulent nobleman, consequently his son was educated in a manner calculated to fit him for the most homorable station in life. Having been cherished in the lap of affidence, he imbibed the feeling of self-superiority in such adegree that for him to yield passively to a rebake, because and humilinting, havened what his natural s at the expected exami while at school, had applied himself diligently to his studies, therefore he had outstripped his more lakewarm companions, and consequently a marked jealousy was perceptible by Charles, and he resolved to treat them with a marked indifference. In the argument now with this student, Charles perceived himself to be a target a missistant. THORN'S PULMONARY CANDY.

THIS pleasant and certain cure for coughs and colds goes ahead of all the preparations now or ever offered to the public. The use of it is so great that villain, liar! The laws of homor demanded a duel. for the increasing demand. Medical agencies, groceries, druggists, coffee houses, and even burs on steamboats, keep a supplyon hand. It is called for every where, and will sell in any place. The reason is this every one who has a cough or cold by eating a few sticks find themselves cured, as it were, by magic. Persons at a distance, by remitting the money, post paid, to the subscriber, will be attended to. For sale by the single stick, 64 cents; five sticks for 25 cents; and at wholesale by WM. Charles, a murdlerer, fled to London! There, through the sid of some friends, he secreted himself until the minions of the law had given up all search for him, and his guilt had been almost forgotten. In a few mouths time, in that city of moral desecration, he abandoned all idea of ever returning to honorable society, for he thought of a blasted reputation,—and with this determination, formed an intimacy with gamplers, there is an intimacy with gamplers, the gold and dishoner, did he live. One time the accomplice of the hardered murderer, another, the favore complice of the hurdered murderer, another, the favorite leader of a small chosen number of thieves! But time effects its changes. So it did finally upon the heart of Charles. His better feelings were once more aroused from that lethargy which had been by reckleasness drowned in a vortex of distriction.

He became distressed about he situation. He know he was deeply involved in guilt, and should his accomplices prove unfaithful, he might yet atone for his crimes upon the scaffold. Fear took possession of his mind. In wild despuir, he fled from his companion, and taking ship, in a few months found himself, and taking ship, in a few months found himself, and inhabitant of the new country. Hope was once more active in his mind. He wished to repent never had , he so seriously reflected upon his debased career now his bosom was torn with the horror of his situation.— He had heretofore reveled in the luxurious halls of were maddening —He longed to bury the past in the virtues of the future, and what time so propitions as virtues of the future, and what time so propitious as the present when he was seperated from his criminal associates by the wide waters-in a land where he was unknown, and where most probably the history of his disgrace had never reached. Encouraged by them : reflections-stimulated with the conviction that repentance was needed to place him once again on the broad platform of honorable life—he reflects, and a secret fear, almost shatters his resolution, as with a knowledge of his intellectual powers, he determines to assume the ministerial garb. And what better mode of living, or, so well calculated for him, who, stung with remorse, desires to leave the world's follies, and by penitence wash out the dark blot which marks his Charles Howard's external appearance was well
