He said that James K. Polk was a duellist, a gam fluential whig print, has positively contradicted, and states that Mr Polk 'is not only a man of exemplary morals but of religious principles ' The National Intelligencer, the organ of the whig party in the Union, and a paper possessing as much veracity as Mr Baer can lay claim to, speaks of Mr Polk as unexceptionable in his social and domestic relations. Here then are three deliberate falsehoods. Another was, that Levi Woodbury declared that high wages only served to make mechanics drink more and work less. This sentiment was uttered by Benjamin Franklin, as Mr Woodbury distinctly stated, and as Baer well knows; and surely Franklin, who was a mechanic himself, and one of the best men that ever lived, cannot be charged with hostility to the interests of mechanics. The expression, furthermore, had no reference to American mechanics, but to those of the old world, and was adverted to by Mr Woodbury for the purpose of showing the directly opposite effect produced by high wages on the condition of workmen in a republican governmen. This fact the speech itself will show. He denied that Henry Clay used the blasphemo expression to Speaker Polk that is attributed to him, and charged it upon Clay, of Alubama. It is well known that this language has been fastened upon Henry Clay by the testimony of men who heard him utter it, and no person, save John W. Baer, has ever
